COMMISSION.

VICTORIA, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, to our trusty and well-beloved Sir THOMAS NICHOLAS REDINGTON, Knight Commander of our most honorable Order of the Bath, ROBERT ANDREWS, Esquire, one of our Counsel learned in the Law, ROBERT WILFRED SKEFFINGTON LUTWIDGE, Esquire, Barrister-at-Law, JAMES WILKES, Esquire, and DOMINICK JOHN CORRIGAN, Esquire, Doctor of Medicine, Greeting:

WHEREAS, We have thought it expedient, for divers good causes and considerations Us thereunto moving, that a diligent and full inquiry should forthwith be made into the state of the Lunatic Asylums and other Institutions for the Custody and Treatment of the Insane now existing in that part of our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland called Ireland, and also into the present state of the Law respecting Lunatics and Lunatic Asylums in that part of our said United Kingdom.

NOW KNOW YE THAT WE, reposing great trust in your fidelity, discretion, and integrity, have authorized and appointed, and by these presents do authorize and appoint you the said Sir THOMAS NICHOLAS REDINGTON, ROBERT ANDREWS, ROBERT WILFRED SKEFFINGTON LUTWIDGE, JAMES WILKES, and DOMINICK JOHN CORRIGAN, to be our Commissioners for the purpose of inquiring into the State of the Lunatic Asylums and other Institutions for the Custody and Treatment of the Insane now existing in that part of our said United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland called Ireland, and also into the present state of the Law respecting Lunatics and Lunatic Asylums in that part of our said United Kingdom. And for the better discovery of the truth in the premises, We do by these presents, give and grant to you, or any two or more of you, full power and authority to call before you, or any two or more of you, such persons as you shall judge necessary, by whom you may be the better informed of the truth in the premises; and We do further by these presents give and grant to you, or any two or more of you, full power and authority to inquire into the premises, and every part thereof by all lawful ways and means whatsoever, and We do hereby give and grant unto you, or any two or more of you, full power and authority, when the same shall appear to be requisite, to administer an Oath or Oaths to any person or persons whatsoever, to be examined before you or any two or more of you, touching or concerning the premises; and We do also give and grant to you, our said Commissioners, or any two or more of you, full power and authority to cause all persons to bring and produce before you, or any two or more of you, all and singular, books, records, papers, and other writings touching the premises, which shall be in the custody of them, or any of them; and our further will and pleasure is that you, or any two or more of you, upon due examination of the premises, do and shall report to us, on or before the first day of May next, under your hands and seals, respectively, what you shall find touching or concerning the premises, upon such inquiry as aforesaid; and We do further will and command, and by these presents ordain, that this our Commission shall continue in full force and virtue, and that you our Commissioners, or any two or more of you, shall and may, from time to time, proceed in the execution thereof, and of every matter and thing therein contained, although the same be not continued from time to time by adjournment: and We do hereby command all and singular our Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Magistrates, Ministers, Constables, Officers, and all other our loving subjects whatsoever, as well within liberties as without, that they be assistant to you and each of you in the execution of these presents. And for your further assistance in the execution of this our Commission, We hereby nominate and appoint our trusty and well-beloved MICHAEL JOSEPH BARRY, Esquire, Barrister-at-Law, to be Secretary to this our Commission, and to attend you our said Commissioners, whose services and assistance we require you to use from time to time as occasion shall require, in witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patent. Witness ourself at Westminster, the Eighth day of October, in the Twentieth Year of our Reign.

By Warrant under the Queen's sign manual.

C. ROMILLY.

By Letters Patent, bearing date, respectively, April 30th, 1857, December 8th, 1857, and March 8th, 1858, Her Majesty was graciously pleased to extend the time allowed for the Commissioners to complete their Inquiry and Report to the 31st of December, 1858.

LUNATIC ASYLUMS, IRELAND, COMMISSION.

REPORT.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

In obedience to your Majesty's Commission, bearing date the 8th October, 1856, we have inquired into the state of the Lunatic Asylums and other Institutions for the custody and treatment of the Insane, now existing in Ireland, and into the present state of the Law respecting Lunatics and Lunatic Asylums in that part of the United Kingdom.

All the members of the Commission assembled in Dublin on the 16th of October, 1856, to take into consideration the course of proceeding, and we determined, with as little delay as possible, to visit the several Private and Public establishments for the reception of the Insane, in order that, by personal inspection, we might inform ourselves of the actual treatment and condition of the afflicted inmates. We also prepared such forms of returns as appeared best calculated to elicit detailed information, as to the number, description, condition, and abode of the Insane Poor in Ireland, and caused the same to be issued prior to the 1st January, 1857, in order that the statements might, as required, apply to that date, and thus exhibit, as far as practicable, an accurate census of that class on one specified day.

The returns which we have obtained from the Asylums and other Public Institutions are, we have no doubt, accurate; but as regards the returns of Insane Poor at large, furnished by the Constabulary, it is consistent with the most perfect accuracy in enumeration that a similar value should not have been attached by each of the persons employed to the term "poor," as designating the class to which the return applied. It may however fairly be assumed that none are included in the returns except those whose poverty, coupled with their mental condition, would justify their admission into Asylums for Lunatic Poor.

At an early period of our labours we felt it necessary to commence the examination of witnesses, in order that we might obtain an exact statement as to the course of proceeding in reference to the Election, Government, and Inspection of Lunatic Asylums, with respect to which the law was by no means explicit, and the official reports before us did not supply adequate information.

With this view, our first witnesses were selected from those officially connected with the administration of the laws relative to Lunatic Asylums; for, in order not to encumber that question with the consideration of the law as regards lunatics not detained in public institutions, we postponed all inquiry on the latter point till the close of our investigation. We subsequently examined several persons connected with institutions for the reception of the insane, and finally held a Public Court at our office in Dublin, and one at each District Asylum, for the purpose of receiving such evidence as might be tendered to us, calculated to throw light upon the subjects of our inquiry.

In the Appendix will be found the whole of the Evidence given before us; and if it contain a repetition of the same interrogatories on each occasion, it must be remembered, that the object of holding these inquiries was to obtain information upon the working of the existing law, and the condition of the Asylum, in each District, and that the examination, therefore, in each case, necessarily took the same direction.

We have, in the course of our proceedings, inspected all the Private and Public Asylums in Ireland specially devoted to the reception of the insane, viz:—

1. District Asylums.
2. House of Industry Asylum (Hardwicke Cells), and Lucan Asylum.
3. Central Criminal Asylum.
4. Private Asylums (Licensed Houses).
5. St. Patrick's Hospital, and Bloomfield Retreat (an Institution under the direction of the Society of Friends).

Reflexes taken.

In addition, we have felt it our duty to visit several of the Prisons and Workhouses in Ireland where lunatics are detained, in order that we might judge of the arrangements made in these establishments for their reception, the manner of their treatment, and the actual condition of those who might at the time be detained therein.

The Appendix to our Report contains the Evidence of the witnesses examined by us, among whom will be found members of the several professions, the representatives of the country districts, as well as of the corporations of several towns, besides those connected with the working of the law, or the management of institutions for the care and treatment of the insane.

STATISTICS OF INSANITY.

Insane maintained at the public cost.

We now proceed to lay before your Majesty the results of our inquiries, and the conclusions at which we have arrived.

From the Returns which we have received, it appears that the Insane Poor of Ireland, maintained at the public cost, or at large, numbered, on 1st January, 1857, 9,286 thus distributed—who, although they may for the most part be classed as poor, yet are not necessarily such.

Thus giving the total number maintained at the public charge, 5,934

At large and unprovided for.

While the number of insane poor at large and unprovided for was, as returned by the Constabulary and the Metropolitan Police, . . . . . 3,352

Total, . . . . . 9,286

Probable number requiring public provision.

This total gives the present number of Insane Poor provided for, or likely to become a charge on the public; but we are far from thinking, for the reasons hereafter assigned, that it is necessary to make provision for the large class of Insane included in the Constabulary Returns. We did not think it desirable to include in these returns any but Poor Lunatics, as, by the introduction of the wealthier class, the total number of Lunatics at Large would unfairly represent those for whom public provision might possibly be required, and it would be more difficult to judge of the extent of asylum accommodation wanting in any district.

Part III. State of Insane, p. 49.

Eighth Report, p. 9.

The Census Commissioners (1851), and the Inspectors of Lunatics, in their last Report, have given returns of the total number of Insane in Ireland, in 1851 and 1857, respectively. The returns of the Inspectors are not given for the same date in the several Institutions, and they contain, moreover, the number of persons simply "epileptics" at large and in the workhouses; and as these are exclusive of the "lunatics" and "idiots" in those returns, they may be omitted from the total of the insane. The Census Returns give the number of Insane in Ireland on the 31st March, 1851, at 9,980, of whom 4,635 were at large. The Inspectors of Lunatics, in their last Report (if we exclude epileptics at large and in workhouses, for those in asylums must be supposed to be insane), fix the number at 11,452, of whom 5,441 are at large. A comparison of these returns, made at an interval of between five and six years, and obtained through the same sources of information, shows a considerable increase in the amount of Insanity in Ireland.

Ibid, p. 10.

The Inspectors of Lunatics, in their Report, state that the return of insane at large which they have given, amounting to 5,441, exclusive of epileptics, may be estimated to include 600 lunatics and idiots, who, so far as they can judge from their returns, are not paupers. This will reduce their estimate of insane poor at large to 4,841; while the returns we have obtained, which distinctly specified that the "poor" alone should be included, have given a total of only 3,352. We trust, therefore, that the demand for additional accommodation may not prove so extensive as the larger returns would suggest.

Insane in Licensed Houses and Benevolent Institutions.

The number of patients in Licensed Houses and Benevolent Institutions on the 1st January, 1857, was 459.

We shall divide the consideration of the subject committed to our investigation into five branches.

STITUTIONS
INSANE.

The history of legislation, as regards a provision for the Lunatic Poor in public Institutions, may be here briefly traced.

History of
in regard to.

The first steps which appear to have been taken for this purpose would seem to have been in the early part of the last century, when, as stated in the interesting Report of the Census Commissioners (1851), Sir William Fowkes, then (1728) Lord Mayor of Dublin, caused cells to be erected in the workhouse for the reception of lunatics. This institution was regulated and maintained under Act of Parliament, but although a small amount of accommodation for lunatic poor was thus afforded, yet the law itself was silent as regarded them.

Census Re-
Part III.
p. 62.

A subsequent Act, 11 & 12 Geo. III., c. 11 (1772), enabled workhouses to be established generally in any county, or county of a city or town, in Ireland; and some small provision was made for lunatics in the houses of industry thus established. The first legislative enactment, however, in Ireland, which was specifically directed to the support of the insane, appears to have been 27 Geo. III., c. 39 (1787), the 8th section of which enabled Grand Jurors to present "such sum or sums of money as shall appear to them to be necessary, at the spring and summer assizes to be held for each respective county, for providing and supporting a ward or wards for the reception and support of such idiots and insane persons as shall be from time to time recommended by two or more magistrates of such county, which magistrates shall certify that such persons so recommended are idiots or insane, and destitute of any means of support." This enactment does not, however, appear to have had any general operation.

11 & 12 Geo.
III. c. 11
(1772).

27 Geo. III.
c. 39 (1787).

In 1806 another Act of Parliament was passed, 46 Geo. III., c. 93, the second section of which enabled Grand Jurors at "each summer assizes to present a sum not exceeding One Hundred Pounds, for the support of a Lunatic Asylum, or ward connected with a House of Industry," and "where no presentment shall have been made under the Act above recited."

46 Geo. III.
c. 93 (1806).

These were, however, very inadequate provisions for the support of the lunatic poor, and although, in the period which had elapsed from the enactment of the House of Industry Act, 11 & 12 Geo. III., c. 11, lunatic wards had been erected either in connexion with those institutions, or under the direct provisions of the subsequent statutes, yet, in 1817, it was stated before a Select Committee of the House of Commons that, "with the exception of one institution in Dublin, one in Cork, and one in Tipperary, there was not provision made for more than 100 lunatics throughout Ireland."

The institution in Dublin here referred to was the Richmond Lunatic Asylum, for which a grant was made by Parliament in 1810. It was opened in 1815, and has since become the Dublin District Asylum. The only remaining trace of the operation of the 27 Geo. III., c. 39, is the case of the lunatic cells in connexion with Lifford Gaol, where three lunatics are still detained.

The attention of Parliament had, however, been drawn to this subject, and the necessity of making further provision for the insane was affirmed by committees of the House of Commons in 1804, 1815, and 1817. The labours of the last committee led to the introduction of the 57 Geo. III., c. 106, repealed and re-enacted by the 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 38 (1821); by which the Lord Lieutenant in Council was empowered to direct and order any number of Asylums for the Lunatic Poor in Ireland to be erected and established in and for such Districts as should seem expedient, with these limitations, that no district should include a part only of any county or city, and that where more than one county was included, the asylum should be sufficient to contain not less than 100 or more than 150; but, in the case of only one county, a number not less than fifty. By subsequent enactment, 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107, those latter limitations were repealed, and a discretion was left to the Lord Lieutenant to fix the maximum numbers of lunatics admissible into district asylums.

Under the 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 33, and subsequent Acts amending the same, nine district asylums were erected and opened before 1835; while the Richmond Asylum had, by Act of Parliament, been created a District Asylum. In 1845, the Cork Asylum, theretofore maintained by Grand Jury Presentment under the 27 Geo. III., c. 39, was declared a District Asylum by 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107; and since 1846 five new districts have been formed and asylums erected. The necessity for increased accommodation has, besides, called for the erection of a new and enlarged asylum in Cork, an additional asylum for the Dublin District, and extensive enlargements of most of the other asylums.

The 7 Geo. IV., c. 14, and 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107, amending the 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 33, give the Lord Lieutenant in Council full power to provide further accommodation for lunatics, should it appear necessary, either by the formation of new districts, and erection of new asylums, or the enlargement of existing buildings.

The Act 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107, sec. 15, gives a further power to the Lord Lieutenant in Council to order the erection of a Provincial Asylum in any or each of the four provinces of Ireland, to be appropriated to any particular class or classes of lunatics; but this enactment has never been carried into operation. The Act also provided for the removal of all lunatics, in houses of industry, or wards supported by Grand Jury Presentment, to the district lunatic asylum; and this provision of the law, except in the case of Lifford, and the Dublin House of Industry, has been carried out. The case of Dublin was peculiar, as the House of Industry was maintained out of an annual Parliamentary vote, and contained lunatics from all parts of Ireland, as well as from the immediate district.

Such has been the course of legislation, as regards a distinct provision for the lunatic poor. We shall now consider the provisions of the law for the government of District Asylums; but previously to so doing we may state, that, in addition to the lunatic poor who were admissible to these asylums, the 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 33, authorized the Lord Lieutenant to cause three classes of lunatics to be removed to them when opened:

1. Persons indicted, tried, and acquitted on the ground of insanity, at the time of the commission of the crime wherewith they were charged.
2. Persons found by jury to be insane on arraignment, and who cannot be tried.
3. Persons found insane in like manner, when brought up to be discharged.

1 Vic. c. 27.

A subsequent statute, 1 Vic., cap. 27, extended this power to four other classes, viz.:

1. Persons under sentence of imprisonment, or transportation, who had become insane.
2. Persons under warrant, in default of surety to keep the peace, who are or may become insane.
3. Persons under committal for trial, and insane (until period of trial).
4. Dangerous Lunatics, committed as such by magistrates.

Classes admissible to

The terms of the Act 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 33, which indicated that Asylums were to be erected for the "lunatic poor," are not to be, and, indeed, have not been, considered as limiting them to the "deserving poor," or those whom, by that technical definition, the law recognises as qualified to be relieved out of the poor rates. They have, nevertheless, been considered, in some cases, as deterring the Board of Governors from receiving any payment for lunatics whose friends and relatives might be enabled to make it; while, at other times, it has not been thought that the Board was prohibited from receiving paying patients into the institutions under their charge. The Act referred to does not appear to us to have contemplated the reception of paying patients. We have found, however, a general opinion to prevail in favour of admitting a class of patients whose relatives would be unwilling to solicit their reception as pauper lunatics, and yet who would be unable to pay for the maintenance of these afflicted creatures in any private asylum. It is for such cases that private benevolence might be expected to provide, and we should be glad to see public charity turned in that direction. Evidence has been given before us of one case in which the proceeds of a charitable bequest were about being (and have since been) applied in this manner, and we are satisfied that there is no object which more calls for the aid of the benevolent than the establishment of charitable lunatic asylums. Ireland can boast of one of the earliest endowments of this nature in the hospital founded by the munificent bequest of Dean Swift, of which we shall have occasion to speak separately; and the Society of Friends have established a Retreat principally for the accommodation of members of their body, which, however, is self-supporting; but there is a wide field still open, there being, we are satisfied, a large number of cases, which are at present either treated as paying patients in public asylums, where they associate with pauper lunatics, or who are kept neglected at home because of the want of a Benevolent Asylum.

We find that there is no fixed rule in district asylums as to paying patients. Some Boards decline to receive them; others receive them at a charge equal to the cost of maintenance; and in others the annual payment demanded is regulated at the discretion of the Board of Governors.

Asylums.

Paying
patients.

We are of opinion that the admission of paying patients should be distinctly recognised, but that it should be subject to such restrictions as the Central Board, which we shall propose to establish, may lay down, both as to the class of patients and the proportion of such cases to be admitted into the asylums, so as at the same time to protect the ratepayers from undue taxation, and the lunatic poor of the lowest class from unfair encroachment upon the accommodation intended more especially for them.

The class of patients to be admitted ought not to comprise those who, from the means which they possess, should be maintained in a private asylum.

We do not consider that any distinction should be made in the treatment of paying patients by extra indulgences being allowed to them, unless it be that, where their friends supply them, and the physician may consider it as having important influence in regard to their moral treatment, the use of their own clothes may be permitted. Even this distinction might be avoided, if the practice were generally abandoned of providing for the inmates an uniform dress which resembles too much prison or workhouse costume.

By the existing law, it rests with the Lord Lieutenant in Council to determine what new asylums shall be erected, and for what districts—the Privy Council usually taking action on the suggestion of the Lord Lieutenant, through the Chief Secretary's Department. On the first formation of Lunatic Asylum districts, the Government had the assistance of the Commissioners for General Control and Correspondence, appointed under 57 Geo. III., c. 106, to "superintend and direct the erection, establishment, and regulation of all such asylums." This Board consisted of eight unpaid members, one half belonging to the medical profession. Subsequent appointments were made as vacancies occurred, but the Board, in 1835, having completed the erection of the number of asylums then considered requisite for the whole of Ireland, resigned their appointments, and Col. (now Sir John Fox) Burgoyne, Brooke Taylor Otley, and John Radcliff, Esqrs., who then constituted the Board of Public Works, were nominated in their stead.

Formation of Districts and erection of Asylums.

Board for "General
Correspondence."

The original Board had taken an active part in carrying out the provisions of the law, and in considering the plans of the several buildings, the extent of district to be attached to each asylum, and the number of patients it should be built for. The new Board appointed in 1835 appear never to have exercised any of the functions belonging to them in connexion with the regulation of the asylums. Mr. Radcliff states—"We have performed the same duties (as the former Commissioners) with reference to building and purchasing ground. We have never performed any duties connected with the management of the asylums." And again—"Our predecessors did all the duty without the help of Inspectors; but since we have been in office the Inspectors have done all the other portion of the duty, and we have been confined to purchasing ground, and erecting buildings, with the necessary fittings, &c."

Fr. 9, 10.

The Inspectors, under the Act of 1845, whose labours have been specially confined to Lunatic Asylums, have, it would appear, practically undertaken much, if not all, of the duties connected with the superintendence and direction of asylums, which the law had assigned to the Commissioners for General Control and Correspondence. Hence it will be seen that in fact all matters connected therewith are now referred to the consideration of the Inspectors by the Executive—except as regards building and the purchase of land, which questions are still left to the Commissioners of Control. It would appear, then, that since the appointment of the Inspectors of Lunatics, the Government have relied upon them for that advice and assistance in reference to the formation of new districts, the localities where new asylums should be erected, and the extent of accommodation to be provided—for which, on the first establishment of District Asylums, they had looked to the Commissioners for General Control and Correspondence. The latter Board, again, have reserved to themselves the selection of the site, the purchase of the land, the erection of the building, and approval of its plan, without having among their body (as was the case on the old Board) any member of the medical profession, who might be supposed to be acquainted with the requirements of such institutions.

As regards the rate-payers of the several districts for which asylums have been erected, the law did not give and it has not been the practice, generally, to allow them any voice, directly or indirectly, in the arrangements for the formation of districts, purchase of land, selection of site, approval of plans, or cost of building.

Proceedings in formation of Districts, &c.

The evidence of Mr. Radcliff details what the practice has been, and it may be briefly stated as follows:—The order in Council, directing the formation of the district, specified the number for which the asylum was to be built, but not the amount to be expended in the erection of the building, except in one instance, the Richmond.

The amount to be paid for the land was fixed by a jury.

Ex. 47.

The cost of the building seems to have been regulated by no fixed rule, for Mr. Radcliff states, "At the beginning we had some intention of limiting the expense to so much per patient. We mentioned, I think, in conversation, about £100 to £120 per patient as the limit; but we found afterwards that it was impossible to fix any thing upon the subject."

Ex. 73.

The money required for the purchase of land and the erection of the asylum was obtained from the Consolidated Fund, under the provisions of the 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 33. The law directed this issue to be made by order of the Privy Council, but through an error, as stated by Mr. Radcliff, application appears of latter years to have been made direct to the Treasury. However, in neither case does it appear to have been the rule to notify to the Executive or to the Local Authorities the amount of the contract made for the erection of the building, this having only been done "in some cases," to the Lord Lieutenant in Council.

Ex. 73, 74.

There remained a considerable additional expenditure for fittings, the amount of which was in like manner drawn from the Consolidated Fund, but without any specific statement being made by the Commissioners to the Lord Lieutenant, or any other parties, as to the probable sum required.

Grand Juries or rate-
consulted.

It thus resulted that, without any communication with the Grand Juries of the several counties, or any other parties representing the ratepayers, and without any specific statement of the probable cost, to the Privy Council, who directed the establishment of these institutions in the several districts, large and expensive asylums have been erected, and the first public intimation of the charge, thereby imposed upon the district, was the warrant for the repayment of the outlay forwarded to the Grand Juries, on whom such repayment was imperative. This has naturally led to very general discontent, more especially as just cause for complaint also existed of the imperfect manner in which the works had been executed, in the asylums recently erected. As this latter point had been the subject of inquiry by another Commission, we did not feel it necessary to enter into any detailed investigation of these matters when brought before us.

Recom-
to alter the
respect.

It does not appear that the course pursued, as above described, by the Commissioners intrusted with the erection of asylums, has been at variance with the provisions of the law—but it must be evident that the law in this respect requires amendment. We cannot think it right that the ratepayers, or those who represent them, should be excluded from all voice in the determination of questions in which they are so deeply concerned; and although stringent enactments may be required to secure proper provision being made for the lunatic poor, yet it seems to us that it is only when the local authorities obstinately refuse to discharge their duty, in this respect, that power should be given to the Executive to supersede their action, in order that the benevolent object of the Legislature may not remain unfulfilled. We shall be prepared, therefore, to recommend an alteration of the law in this particular, as well as in the constitution of the Central Authority, which is to superintend and direct the Erection, Establishment, and Regulation of Lunatic Asylums.

Inspection
of Asylums.
7 Geo. IV. c.
74.

The Act 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 33, was silent as regards inspection of asylums, but in 1826 the Prisons Act, 7 Geo. IV., c. 74, s. 55, imposed on the two Inspectors-General of Prisons, thereby appointed, the duty of visiting and inspecting "every madhouse and place where lunatics and idiots are confined, whether the same be a public establishment or kept for profit by a private individual." Each Inspector-General was to visit those in his circuit once in each year, so that the whole "were reported on by each of the Inspectors once in every two years at the least." A copy of these reports was required, by the 56th section, to be delivered to the Secretary of each Grand Jury, after such visits, to be laid before that body at the next ensuing assizes. This duty continued to be performed by the Inspectors-General of Prisons, who, by the 5 & 6 Vic., c. 123, were specially declared "Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums." The Act 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107, s. 23, provided for the appointment of one or two qualified persons to act as "Inspectors of Lunatics" in Ireland, on whose appointment the duties of Inspector-General of Prisons, so far as they related to the inspection of Lunatic Asylums or other establishments for lunatics, were to be transferred to such Inspectors of Lunatics "who," in the words of the Act, "shall thereupon undertake and perform them." Dr. Francis White, at that time one of the Inspectors-General of Prisons, was named Inspector of Lunatics under the above Act, in the year 1845; and he continued to visit and report on the several Lunatic Asylums, &c., as required by the provisions of the 7 Geo. IV., c. 74. In 1846, a second Inspector, Dr. Nugent, was appointed, who did not, however, enter on his duties until the commencement of the following year. Since that period, five Reports have been made by the Inspectors of Lunatics, on the Asylums in Ireland, each for a period of two years; and although these documents testify to the zealous anxiety of the Inspectors to insure suitable provision being made for the Insane, and contain much interesting statistical information relative to the condition of the asylums and lunacy generally in Ireland, yet we cannot but express our opinion that these biennial general reports were not a compliance with the provisions of the 7 Geo. IV., c. 74, s. 55, which required "An annual report to be transmitted to the Chief Secretary, prior to the 1st February in each year." We further think, that the omission to report specifically on each Institution, for the information of the Grand Juries, as required by sec. 56, as well as of the Lord Lieutenant, which had previously been done, is to be regretted.

The Inspectors of Lunatics were, in 1852, appointed Governors, ex officio, of all the District Asylums, and as such take part in the proceedings, in every respect, as ordinary Governors. We consider this position quite inconsistent with that of an Inspector, whose duty it is to report on the state and condition of institutions in the government of which he thus personally shares the responsibility.

Among the provisions of the 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 33, the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council were empowered by sec. 5, "to make, frame, and establish, or upon the suggestion and recommendation of the Commissioners for General Control and Correspondence, to adopt and authorize any Rules and Regulations for the good conduct and management of District Asylums in general, or any asylum in particular." This most important measure for securing the good government of these institutions appears to have been imperfectly carried out for several years. On the completion of the Armagh District Asylum, in 1825, an Order in Council was issued directing the Commissioners to prepare rules and regulations, which were to comprise an exact account of the patients, from whence removed, and also a form of admission, and to submit the same to the Privy Council. The task of preparing rules the Commissioners appear to have performed, but they deferred submitting them to the Privy Council for their approval, until they had been tried by the Governors of the asylum. Nothing confirmatory of these rules was passed by the Council, and it was not till 1843 that general rules and regulations for the government of Lunatic Asylums were formally approved by them.

These rules and regulations are, however, in many respects, unsuited to the existing arrangements for the management of the asylums; they have been in many points quite disregarded, and in some habitually violated, and verbal directions have, in other cases, been deemed sufficient excuse for dispensing with the authorized rules. As instances, we may refer to the evidence concerning Richmond Asylum, and the manner in which the duties of the Manager of that institution have been performed; to the forms of admission in some asylums, which prevent the reception of idiots and epileptic cases, although the rules declare them admissible; and to the invariable practice, at the Ballinasloe and Waterford Asylums, of admitting patients, not by special order of the Board, but by the Visiting Physician.

The principal defect in the rules, as regards the existing state of things in the asylums, is that the "duties" assigned to the Manager have been drawn up in contemplation of that officer not being a member of the medical profession. Fully concurring in the propriety of the asylums being in charge of professional persons, as our subsequent suggestions for their improvement will indicate, we regard a total alteration of that portion of the rules which affects the Manager and Physician as absolutely requisite. Indeed we may state generally, that a new Code of Rules for the government of these institutions is of urgent necessity; and we feel called upon to express our strong opinion that, when once a body of rules has been approved of, they should be strictly enforced, or, if found unsuited, should be altered or repealed; for there is nothing so calculated to encourage a laxity of discipline and want of order in any establishment, as that its officers should be allowed to regard the regulations framed for their conduct and government as a dead letter, deserving neither their observance nor notice.

Another point to which our attention has been attracted is, that the Books required to be kept by the regulations, and some of which are of great importance, such as the Morning Statement Book, intended as a faithful record of the condition of the inmates, are most irregularly and imperfectly kept in some instances, no entries whatever being made for several days. Again, the forms used are various, and not in accordance with the regulations. In many cases, the Memorandum Book, which is supposed to be a record of all matters brought by the Manager before the Board, and which it might be presumed that he would feel an interest in keeping, as showing that he had not

tion.

Next to the regulations for the government of these institutions comes the consideration of the machinery by which they are governed and directed. The Governors or Directors of the District Asylums are nominated by the Lord Lieutenant in Council, under the provisions of the 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 33. The number is unlimited, and although the principal nobility and gentry in the several counties, and dignitaries of the several churches, as well as clergymen of different persuasions, have from time to time been appointed members of these Boards, yet the attendance is in many cases very irregular and deficient. In districts comprising more than one county the Board consists of members chosen from each of these counties, but the attendance is, as might be supposed, chiefly from among the Governors living in the immediate vicinity, and therefore usually from the county in which the asylum is situated.

Inefficient
at Boards.

It has been suggested that these Boards should have more of a representative character, and that Town Councils and other local bodies should have a voice in the nomination of Governors.

Alteration
appointing
recommended.

We recommend that in future the number of Governors for each asylum should be limited, and that they should be named, two-thirds by the Grand Juries of the several counties or counties of towns, in such proportions as the Lord Lieutenant shall determine, and one-third by the Executive.

Town Councils.

We have left the selection with the Grand Juries, because, until the law shall otherwise provide, they are the constituted Administrators of the County Rate, out of which the asylums are maintained, and we think it advisable that the nomination of one-third should be left to the Government in order that an opportunity may remain for securing for these institutions the services of persons who, although not selected by the Grand Juries may, from the attention they have given to such establishments or other causes, be likely to be useful members of the Board. In cases where the fiscal functions of Grand Juries are discharged by the Town Councils the appointments should rest with the latter body. The Governors appointed by the Grand Juries or Town Councils should be annually elected—those named by the Executive should be removable at pleasure, but the non-attendance of any of those Governors throughout one year continuously, should vacate the appointment.

desirable.

The Governors meet once a month, but we think more frequent meetings would be desirable, as, where a quorum does not assemble on the appointed day, the whole business to be transacted has to be adjourned for a month.

Visiting Committee, or visits by
Asylums.

By the Privy Council regulations, it is the duty of the Board regularly to inspect the asylum and the inmates, but it will be seen, by the evidence, that in some asylums this is rarely done, and in others, although certain members of the Board, who take an interest in the institution, are in the habit of visiting it, yet there is no Visiting Committee appointed by the Board for that purpose, and no reports are therefore made to the Board of the condition of the Asylum and the inmates, or the conduct of the officers, except by those officers themselves.

Grand Jury Superintendence, 2 & 3
W. IV. c. 35.

We think that either a Visiting Committee should be named by each Board, or some arrangement made by which the Governors would themselves undertake, in rotation, the duty of visitors, and record their observations in a book kept for that purpose.

Appoint-

The 2 & 3 William IV., c. 35, empowers Grand Juries to appoint Boards of Superintendence of Charitable Institutions, supported in whole or in part by Grand Jury presentment, to visit, inspect, inquire into, and examine such establishments, and report thereupon to the Grand Jury at each assizes—the control and superintendence, however, to remain with the Governors. This Act, which expressly applies to Lunatic Asylums, appears to be only in partial operation—no such Board having been appointed in several counties.

The appointment of the principal officers of the District Asylums has hitherto been exercised by the Government, but the legal proceedings which were taken in order to set aside the Lord Lieutenant's appointment of Chaplains at Belfast leave it very doubtful whether the right of appointment is vested in the Executive, or indeed with whom it may be supposed to rest; for the Acts of Parliament are silent upon the subject.

Manager.

The appointment of servants rests, according to the Privy Council regulations, with the Manager, who can fine, suspend, or, with the concurrence of the Board, dismiss them.

Of late years it has been the practice to appoint professional persons to the situation of Manager, and we think there can be no doubt of the propriety of this course, but the person so appointed should be disqualified from private practice. The regulations for the government of the Asylums contemplated the Manager being a civilian, and the duties assigned to him, in addition to the moral treatment of the patients, are principally those of a superintendent. On the other hand his treatment of the patients was to be subject to the directions of the Physician. It will obviously be necessary to lay down rules more suitable to the new arrangements.

We are all of opinion that the Resident Physician should have charge of the Asylum, and be responsible for the treatment of the inmates as regards their insanity. Four of us consider that the Resident Physician should be solely responsible for the treatment of the patients, both as regards their bodily health and their mental disease; but that he should be assisted, when necessary, by a Visiting Physician, whose duties, however, should be confined to cases where his attendance may be required in consultation by the Resident Physician. A very strong opinion is, however, entertained by one of our body, Dr. Corrigan, that there should be a Visiting Medical Officer attached to each Asylum; that his attendance should not be dependent on the discretion either of the Resident Physician or of the Local Board, but that he should visit the institution daily; that while the Resident Physician and Manager should have general charge of the institution, and be responsible for the treatment of the insane, as such, the duty of the Visiting Medical Officer in their regard should extend only to cases where his attendance may be required in consultation by the Resident Physician, but that the Visiting Physician should daily visit all cases whatever confined to bed, in seclusion, or under restraint; that he should see, with as little delay as possible, all cases of injury, accident, and child-birth, and record such observations on them as may appear requisite; that he should be directly responsible for the treatment of the sick, as distinguished from the mere insane; that, in all cases of discharged patients, the certificate of discharge should be signed by both Resident and Visiting Physicians; and that, in all cases of death, the record of the illness and cause of death should be signed by both the Resident and Visiting Physicians.

We are all of opinion that the Resident and Visiting Medical Officers should each be possessed of a qualification both in medicine and surgery; and that all medicines, whether ordered by Resident or Visiting Physician, should be entered in the Prescription Book, and properly labelled for administration.

We think the Resident Physician should be relieved from all duties of a civil character, connected with the management of the institution, which might interfere with the devotion of his time to his more proper duty, the cure and treatment of the inmates. Leaving him the chief officer of the asylum, with authority over all the other officers, except the Consulting Physician, we propose that his civil duties should be transferred to the officer to be called the Clerk, while the latter office should be separated from that of Storekeeper. The Storekeeper should have charge of all the property of the asylum, and superintend the management of the farm. We also consider that in small asylums the office of Apothecary may be dispensed with, and that the Resident Physician might compound the necessary medicines.

As regards the appointments of the superior officers, viz., Resident and Consulting Physicians, Clerk, Storekeeper, Matron, we consider they should be left to the Governors; the subordinate officers and servants to be appointed and removed by the Resident Physician, subject to the approval of the Governors; the number to be regulated by the Central Board.

The evidence we have received is, to a great, perhaps preponderating, extent, unfavourable to the higher appointments being given to the Governors; but as a general principle we do not see why the Executive Government should interfere in these matters, or that its interference has led, or is likely to lead, to a better selection of officers than would be made by the local authorities. It is true, as has been stated, that the election of these officers may tend to local contentions, and that private feeling may prevail to the prejudice of the institution. We think that there is not a little reason to believe that political influence might lead to an equally injurious result, if the appointments are left to the Executive. It appears to us, however, that the central Board controlling these institutions should have a veto on all appointments; and that the Executive should have a power of removal on their recommendation, founded on full investigation of the officer's incapacity or misconduct.

The appointment of Chaplains should be compulsory on the Governors, and vested in them, subject to the provisions for appointment in the Poor Law Acts, and with a preference to clergymen locally officiating. Power should also be given to the Executive Government, in the event of the Board of Governors not making the appointments required by law, to nominate absolutely to such offices; the person so appointed to have the same power as those elected by the Board. The salaries should be fixed by the Central Board.

The appointment of Chaplains to these institutions has led to conflicting opinions; and the Belfast Board of Governors have successfully resisted their introduction into that asylum. We have elicited opinions upon this point at each of the inquiries which we held, and the evidence of Governors, Chaplains, and other persons, will be found in the Appendix. Except at Belfast and Armagh, to neither of which asylums Chaplains are attached, it will be seen that the vast preponderance of testimony, almost amounting to unanimity, is in favour of such appointments, and strongly expressive, as well of the consolation thereby afforded to the great majority of the inmates, as of the cruelty of depriving them of the ministrations of their clergy, and the means of attending divine worship. We do not hesitate to say that we fully concur in these opinions, and recommend that Chaplains should be included among the officers whom it shall be imperative to attach to each asylum, and that proper arrangements should be made for the due celebration of religious worship therein. At the same time, as the ministrations of the Chaplain have a necessary connexion with mental exertion on the part of the patient, we consider that the duties of that officer will require, on his part, great judgment and discretion in their discharge—so that while the consolations of religion are fully afforded, the peculiar mental condition of the patients will not be lost sight of by the Chaplain; and that, while visiting those of his own communion, he will carefully abstain from any thing calculated to excite or disturb the minds of those who belong to a different persuasion. We cannot suppose that these considerations will be absent from the mind of any clergyman entrusted with the pastoral charge of the inmates of an asylum. We cannot, therefore, withhold the expression of our conviction that the State is bound to make provision for such appointments. The rules should give power to the Resident Physician, under ordinary circumstances, to prevent the visits of Chaplains to patients to whom such visits may, in his opinion, at the time be injurious; but in cases of bodily disease, where danger to life is apprehended, special notice of such illness should be given to the respective Chaplains, who should then have unrestricted access to the patients.

Arrangements for
worship.

In reference to this subject we may state that our attention has been directed by some of the witnesses, and also by communications which we have received, to objectionable arrangements at present existing for the celebration of divine worship, and the subject was also brought under our notice by the Government in reference to the Richmond Asylum.

No Chapel was attached to the older asylums, and the services of the several churches are in them usually performed in different apartments, which, except at that time, are used for their ordinary purposes. In Ballinasloe, portions of the building at the end of the corridors, in either wing, are fitted up for Protestant and Roman Catholic service respectively, and are not devoted to any other use, except as the passages of communication between different parts of the building. In the more recently erected asylums a chapel has always been provided, which is used in common by the several churches, except in the case of Richmond, where it has been divided by a screen, and a portion fitted up as a Roman Catholic chapel, the remainder as a place of worship for the Established and other churches. Considerable objection has been made, as above stated, on the part of the Roman Catholics, to the use for the religious worship of their church of a chapel common to all churches, and, on the other hand, it has been found at Richmond, that the Protestant inmates object to the arrangement by which they are obliged to worship in the same building as those differing from them in religion, although a screen separates the two apartments, and the two services are not proceeded with at the same time. We think it desirable that all ground for these objections should, as far as possible, be removed, and that, where necessary, a separate and distinct place should be set apart for the celebration of divine service by each chaplain, and that the arrangements adopted for religious worship and the attendance of chaplains should, in all cases, be such as will prevent any cause being afforded for religious disputation or excitement among the inmates.

servants.

In the Tables appended to this Report will be found the number of Officers and Servants employed in each institution, and their emoluments. It will be observed that the proportion of attendants to patients varies somewhat in the several asylums. In our opinion, they are nowhere in excess—indeed, we feel we may with safety add, that, in all, additional attendants are required, if an efficient curative treatment, such as is in accordance with modern views upon this subject, is to be pursued. We are glad to observe, generally, that the non-restraint system finds favour among the Medical Attendants of these Institutions, but its adoption necessarily involves a greater amount of attendance, and, consequently, a larger staff, the expense of which should not for a moment have weight against the great and beneficial results, which the introduction of this mode of treatment will produce.

servants.

Another point, to which we desire to draw attention, is the small amount of wages given to the attendants in some of the asylums. The duty of the persons so employed is at all times disagreeable and irksome—frequently dangerous and disgusting. It requires intelligence, temper, and kindness, on the part of those discharging it, or the conduct of the attendant may undo all the judicious treatment of the Manager. A higher class of servants, therefore, should be sought, and care should be taken, in their selection, not alone that they are possessed of the qualities above described, but that they are sufficiently edu-enabled to be enabled to contribute to the recreation of the patients by rendering for their amusement. Such occupations will beguile the wearisomeness of their watching in the wards, and, helping to cheer and tranquillise the patients, will render their attendance a more grateful task.

As regards the higher Officers, we consider their Salaries should be regulated by the Central Board. The salary of the Resident Physician and Manager should be such as will secure the services of a competent Medical Officer in that capacity; and we think it but just that it should increase with length of service, so that those who fill the situation may not be shut out from all prospect of bettering their condition.

We have stated that the Medical Staff of the asylums should consist of a Resident Medical Manager and of a Visiting Physician. If, in the larger institutions, the services of more than one Resident Medical Officer be required, it should be in the power of the Central Board to make order to that effect.

The law should strictly provide for the Superannuation of all the Officers and Servants of these institutions. The recent Statute on that subject has been brought into operation in several asylums; but it does not include all the officers.

We considered that the scale of retirement in the case of the Medical Officers should not depend on the same length of service as is required by the General Superannuation Act, for the Medical Manager will usually have entered on the duties of his office after he has been for some time engaged in the practice of his profession, and consequently will not, when compelled by advancing years to resign his office, be enabled to count the same length of service as the subordinate officers. The retiring allowance should in no case exceed two-thirds of the salary, and should be given in cases of permanent sickness or infirmity, as well as for length of service, and in all cases where rations and clothes are given, the value of these allowances should be taken into account in fixing the superannuation.

The 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 88, sec. 7, enabled Grand Jurors to present for the Maintenance of the Asylum, the officers and attendants, and the patients therein. A subsequent Statute, 6 Geo. IV., c. 54, empowered the Lord Lieutenant in Council to direct a sum, not exceeding £10,000 per quarter, to be advanced from the Consolidated Fund, to be allocated for that object; which sums the Grand Jurors are bound to repay. It is in accordance with these provisions that the asylums are at present maintained—application being made to the Privy Council, as stated in the evidence, on an estimate of the expenditure for the quarter, previously submitted to and approved by the Inspectors. This course of proceeding is exceptional; no other institutions supported out of the public rates being thus supplied with money advanced out of the Consolidated Fund. These arrangements have enabled the institutions to be conducted without impediment from temporary deficiency of funds, while the advances have been punctually repaid to the State; and there appears reason for this provision of the law, inasmuch as most of the lunatic asylums—all of those originally erected—were jointly available for several counties, and the Governors would probably have experienced difficulties in reference to their finances when the supply of funds neither depended upon their own acts nor had been levied by their authority, but was contributed by probably three or more distinct bodies. Under all these circumstances, we do not recommend any alteration in the law in this respect.

We think the present system of Auditing Asylum Accounts should be altered. That duty is now discharged by the Commissioners in London, and the audit usually takes place at a long period after the expenditure has been incurred. It would be more satisfactory if the accounts were audited by an officer, attending at the asylum for that purpose, as soon after the close of each half-year as possible. Such a system would be far more effectual than that now in operation, and would obviate the necessity for that frequent, and often prolonged, correspondence, which the Managers are obliged to carry on with the Commissioners of Audit in London.

Other questions have been brought before us by several witnesses, such as the incidence of Taxation for maintaining the asylums, the chargeability of the inmates, &c.; and we have ourselves invited the opinions of many witnesses upon these subjects.

At the time the District Asylums were first erected, there existed no special provision for the Relief of the general Poor in Ireland; and, as the Poor Law Act, subsequently introduced, placed a portion of the burden of taxation thereby created on the Landlord as well as the Tenant, it is urged that it is anomalous that the support of the Lunatic Poor should, on the contrary, still fall entirely on the Occupier, as the person from whom the county rate is levied.

If no provision had been made for the lunatic poor until the passing of the Poor Relief Act, it is not probable that any distinction would have been made in the incidence of taxation for the support of the lunatic, as distinguished from the general, poor. The same reasons do not, however, exist for transferring from occupiers a burden which, when entering into their contracts, they knew they should bear, as did for dividing between landlord and occupier the new and unforeseen taxation, introduced by the Law for Relief of the Poor in 1838. After careful consideration of the subject, we do not feel that we can recommend the transfer of the charge for the lunatic poor to the Poor Rate.

Again, it has been suggested that the cost of maintaining the lunatic poor should be charged according to the provisions of the Poor Relief Act, viz., on the electoral division, or, where that cannot be fixed, on the union at large; and it has been urged, that more effectual inquiry could be made into each case by the Guardians on the spot, than by Governors at a considerable distance. The latter remark is, no doubt, true, but, as regards the chargeability, we cannot recommend any change. First, so long as the asylums are supported out of the Grand Jury rate, there would be a difficulty in levying the charge for union at large lunatics, since the unions may be situated in different counties; and secondly, we do not consider that the same reason exists for making a parish or electoral division responsible for the maintenance of its lunatic poor, as for its aged or unemployed paupers. Fixing the charge on a small area, no doubt, leads to applications for relief being minutely examined, but the existence of lunacy is a palpable prima facie ground for relief in the asylum, and does not call for the same scrutiny of the case.

Admission
to Asylums.

We think considerable improvement should be made in the manner in which Admissions to the asylums take place. No uniformity of practice now exists. In some asylums idiots and epileptics are, contrary to the regulations, declared inadmissible, while in others they are admitted. In some, as stated, paying patients are received, in others rejected. In more than one case the admissions are, contrary to rule, made by the Physician and Manager; in others, as required, they are considered and determined upon by the Board. There should be one rule, rigidly enforced, for regulating admissions; and we see no reason for departing from the Privy Council rule, that "Idiots as well as epileptics, where the fits produce imbecility of mind as well as of body, should be admissible."

Provisional.

We further consider that it should be at all times competent to the Resident Medical Manager to admit all cases provisionally in the intervals between the meetings of the Board; and that as it is of the utmost importance that cases of insanity should as speedily as possible be removed to an asylum, the regulations to be framed should afford every facility for their admission.

houses.

In cases of ordinary admissions, a number of queries are required to be answered with as much accuracy as possible—the object of which is to procure a history of the case. In admissions from the Gaols, under Lord Lieutenant's warrant, and from Workhouses, it has been stated that this document is seldom or never obtained. We shall have occasion to suggest an alteration in the law affecting the committal of lunatics to gaols; but we think it ought to be imperative on the authorities of the workhouses to procure as much information as possible when admitting a lunatic, so as to enable them to answer the queries; or, if the person has become a lunatic in the workhouse or gaol, that as detailed particulars of the presumed causes and the symptoms of insanity as can be collected should be at once noted by the Medical Officer and Governor or Master.

Allowing
on trial.
Discharges;
move, &c.

We think that there should be power given to permit any patient to be absent from an asylum, on trial, for a limited period.

As regards discharges from asylums, some complaint has been made that the relatives who place the patients in confinement are unwilling to remove them, and that the bond to that effect has been found useless. We think a ready mode should be provided of recovering the cost of maintaining the lunatic, after due notice served upon the parties bound to remove him.

General
the Asylums.

Having thus far reported on the provisions of the law regarding District Lunatic Asylums, their erection, government, maintenance, &c., we shall now proceed to give our opinion upon the Condition of these Asylums generally at the time of our visits.

The District Lunatic Asylums of Ireland have, with one or two exceptions, been erected at two distinct periods—those of earlier date immediately subsequent to the Act 1 and 2 Geo. IV., c. 33, and under the direction of the original Commissioners for Control and Correspondence; the latter buildings for the additional districts, erected subsequently to 1846, when the necessity for increased lunatic accommodation became obvious.

The earlier asylums are Carlow, Belfast, Derry, Armagh, Waterford, Clonmel, Ballinsloe, Limerick, and Maryborough.

The more recent erections are Kilkenny, Killarney, Omagh, Sligo, and Mullingar, to which may be added the Eglington Asylum at Cork, and the new asylum at Richmond, Dublin.

see App.

The plan adopted for the earlier asylums was that of a radiating building of two stories, having the airing courts confined to the irregular spaces between the radii, the front building, and an outer wall, against which sheds were usually erected, or, as in Limerick, low additional wards. In Derry, underground cells had been provided; but, if ever used, they have long since ceased to be occupied by patients. The necessary offices usually occupied a space immediately behind the centre of the front building, in which are the apartments of the Managers and Matrons. These buildings were not provided with any modern improvements: no water was laid on—the patients, as in Carlow, being left to wash in the open courts under shelter of a shed; and, at most, one had and imperfectly constructed bath being provided, for each side of the building. A like want of baths existed at Derry. The kitchens were usually small and inconvenient; and where additional buildings have been erected, these, as well as the other offices, have been found inadequate to the increased wants of the establishment. No places of worship or recreation halls were provided, nor any artificial means of ventilating the cells and galleries; no water-closets in the several wards; neither were there sculleries or store-rooms, nor adequate means for the heating of the building.

In the more modern buildings a totally different style of construction has been adopted. These are often of pleasing elevation, but of costly construction, having three floors instead of two, and usually of great length, with, in some cases, retreating wings at each end; long galleries, with no means for heating them except small fire-places in the outer walls, so placed, it would appear, in order to add to the beauty of the elevation by a prominent gable; day rooms, forming projections with a like view to architectural effect, with three exterior walls, and frequently cold and comfortless—the cells almost invariably on the northern side of the building, which is not generally the case in the older asylums. Improvements are perceptible in the provision of lavatories and bath rooms, with a proper supply of water, of recreation halls, chapels, and vastly superior kitchens and offices, as well as infirmaries, and arrangements for ventilation.

In almost all the asylums, however, whether of the earlier or more modern date, the airing courts are situate on the northern side of the building, cold and cheerless, the sewerage imperfect or ill-planned, and the supply of water frequently defective, as well from insufficiency of power to raise it as absolute deficiency during some parts of the year. At Killarney the quality of the water was distinctly condemned by the Resident Medical Officer; and it appears strange that, in the erection of this, the latest asylum which has been built, such an important matter should have been overlooked. No doubt the attention of the Governors has been attracted to the deficiencies which exist, and we learned that in those asylums where want of baths, &c., was particularly observable, measures were in contemplation for providing them. In the older asylums, as above stated, the want of lavatories is much felt, and the erection of water-closets is particularly called for.

It will not, however, suffice that these improvements should be introduced, but it should be the duty of the Authorities to satisfy themselves that they are made available for the patients.

From our own observation we can state that, in some asylums, proper attention is not paid to the cleanliness of the patients, either by enforcing the usual daily ablutions or the periodical bath.

Again, at times we have found the water-closets systematically kept locked, and never used by the patients; while in the old Richmond Lunatic Asylum, in the city of Dublin, the unfortunate lunatics were required, from time to time, to clear out the contents of the privies in the yards, and to carry the soil through a portion of the wards. These privies were usually so offensive as to be absolutely injurious to the health of the inmates, whose chief places of exercise were the small yards or courts in which they were situated. Nothing appeared so defective, generally, as their condition, and that of the sewerage. As an instance of the latter, we may allude to Sligo, one of the most recently erected asylums, where the main sewer had been conducted immediately under the infirmary ward, and so little below the surface that the rooms were uninhabitable. A tradesman working in the establishment, who slept there, was seriously affected by the effluvia, and when we visited the apartment, the smell was insufferable. The necessity of having the sewerage arrangements in perfect order is too obvious to require more than notice, and we trust that the several Boards of Governors will take measures for securing their effective operation.

We have already observed generally on the want of sufficient arrangements for heating the asylums, a defect which is the more to be deplored as heat is so essential for the comfort of the unfortunate lunatic. There are fire-places usually in the day rooms and corridors, but in some asylums fires are never lighted in the corridors, while in others, the fire-places being in the outer walls, and ill-constructed, are of little effect. In a few of the asylums open stoves are substituted for fire-places in the corridors, which is a great improvement.

The efforts made to secure the proper ventilation of the new asylums have not generally been successful. The usual complaint made was, that the ventilating shafts did not act, Ventilation.

Destructive
Asylums.

In some this may have arisen from the furnaces not being regularly lighted, the fires being only kept up when they are required for other purposes, and generally but for one day in the week. It would appear that all idea of successfully ventilating these buildings by artificial means has been at length abandoned, for the Mullingar Asylum, one of the last erected, has no arrangements for that object.

rooms.

In most of the new asylums padded rooms have been provided, for refractory patients, but their construction has not at times been approved, which has led to the discontinuance of their use. We think no asylum should be without these rooms, which, under the non-restraint system, now prevailing in most of these institutions, are generally found useful.

Recreation, amusement,
want of.

In the new asylums recreation halls have been provided, but, excepting in a few cases, as the new Richmond and Sligo Asylums, we found that they were either not used or were devoted to other purposes. We are sorry to be obliged to add, that we fear this has generally resulted from the Managers or Governors not attaching sufficient importance to the amusement of the inmates, as a portion of their treatment. We hope that this idea will be dispelled, and that the great want of any amusing occupation for the patients, which is particularly observable throughout the asylums (with few exceptions) will, before long, cease to be a subject of unfavourable comment. At present, whatever attempts have been made in a few instances, and especially at Richmond and Sligo, in the way of erecting entertainments, &c., nothing has been done to mitigate the bare and cheerless character of the apartments usually occupied by the inmates. In corridor or day-room, the lunatic sees nothing but the one undiversified white wall—giving to these hospitals, intended for the restoration of the alienated mind, an air of blankness and desolation more calculated to fix than to remove the awful disease under which it labours.

It cannot be denied, notwithstanding the care and attention which appear generally to be given by the Managers and Visiting Physicians to the patients under their charge, that, on the whole, the lunatic asylums of Ireland wear more the aspect of places merely for the secure detention of lunatics than of curative hospitals for the insane. Probably it is by some considered that, the inmates being poor, the ratepayers should not be called on to provide for them comforts and appliances beyond their position; and something, perhaps, of the idea prevails, that the lunatic asylum should not, by the comfort it provides for its inmates, cease to be a test, like the workhouse, for those who seek it as an asylum. But it is almost needless to point out that the cases are by no means analogous, and it would be as consistent to prevent the surgeons of our county infirmaries or fever hospitals giving expensive medicines or comforts to patients, as to refuse to provide for the lunatic what may contribute to his cure. Besides, we believe it better economy to relieve the rates, by the cure of the lunatic, than to burden them with his permanent maintenance, by perpetuating his insanity.

Dietary.

As regards the dietary of the patients, we have to observe that, although it varied considerably in several asylums, yet it usually appeared to be equal, if not superior, to that to which the inmates had been habituated previously to their admission. In some Asylums there appeared not to be a sufficient quantity of vegetable food in the dietary—a change originating when the potato supply was deficient some years since. The potato having again become the principal food of the lower classes in this country, the transition may have serious effect on the newly-admitted patients. We think that buttermilk and skimmed-milk, which are used in some Asylums, are objectionable articles of diet in such institutions. Copies of the dietary tables of Asylums, and of Returns showing the consumption of the principal articles of food in the several Asylums, will be found in the Appendix. These Returns, however, differ widely from the allowances specified in the diet-tables of some Asylums, and we cannot reconcile the apparent discrepancy. If the Returns of consumption are correct, the patients cannot receive the amount of food professed to be allowed to them. We took the opportunity, when visiting the asylums, of examining the food, and, the manner in which the meals are served, which was generally very satisfactory; but we hope the practice prevailing at Maryborough, of tossing out their food (potatoes) before the inmates, as if they were cattle or pigs, has been abandoned, and that some more civilized manner of furnishing such a meal, in a great public institution, has been adopted. The absence of salt from the frugal meal of the poor lunatic, which the Resident Physician seemed to consider unimportant, has, we hope, also been corrected.

The quantity of bedding in the several asylums appeared ample. Beds of cocoa-nut fibre are much in use, and generally found knotted and uncomfortable. Straw beds are also much used, but we think a better material should be provided for sick and bed-ridden patients. The bedsteads were frequently of bad and objectionable construction. Measures, we doubt not, will be taken by the Governors to provide a better article, as both they and the managers seem aware that slightly constructed iron bedsteads are liable to be broken up by the lunatic, and to become dangerous weapons in their hands. These bedsteads bad, we found, been in most cases supplied by the Commissioners for Control, and not by the Board of Governors.

In most of the asylums the clothing was sufficient and of fair quality; in some, however, it was dirty and much worn, and generally it requires improvement.

The condition of the airing courts for the refractory wards on the female side, at Limerick, was very disgusting, and we were strongly impressed by the evident want of careful attention and treatment to their crowded inmates, some of whom were ill-clad and in a most filthy condition.

At Omagh, a new asylum, many of the patients were in an equally objectionable state, and no sufficient means appeared to have been taken for attending to the cases of dirty patients, and endeavouring to correct their habits.

The greater portion of the male inmates of the lunatic asylums are usually employed during the day at labour on the farm or grounds attached to the institution, while a few are instructed in some useful trade—generally shoemaking or tailoring, for the use of the establishment, and sometimes weaving. The women, for the most part, find employment in the laundry, or are engaged in needlework and making up articles of female attire for the use of the establishment; spinning and knitting are likewise a frequent occupation. Besides this, many of the inmates of both sexes are employed to a considerable extent in the kitchen and other household work of the asylum. We have, however, on some occasions, found that the male inmates were employed in works particularly offensive, such as pumping out a soil tank, cleaning out privies, &c., which it appeared to us, objectionable that lunatics should be engaged in. In some cases, also, the amount of labour exacted from them in working the water-wheel was excessive. We think that in the arrangement of lunatic asylums all labour required for the latter work should be horse or steam power.

From the above, it will be seen that the employment of the men is chiefly out of doors; on the other hand, the female inmates did not appear generally to be allowed sufficient out-door exercise. It is true that the especial scenes of their labours is the interior of the establishment; but we think some arrangement might be made in the asylums for their more frequent recreation in the grounds—at present, it appears generally that, except in summer, the females are seldom allowed to walk beyond the airing-courts, and that even at that period of the year the permission is limited to one day in the week.

Care should be taken that the lunatics are never employed in any work for private profit. In one instance we found they were at work on the farm of the Resident Manager.

We have observed that, in general, all idea of school instruction had been given up. This is to be regretted, because, although there may be a large number who, from age and mental imbecility, would be unable to profit thereby, yet there will always be very many to whom literary instruction will not alone be an advantage but an agreeable occupation, tending to their mental improvement by training their minds to habits of continued attention.

In some, only, of the asylums a small collection of old books, and a few numbers of some interesting journal, or illustrated newspaper, were kept for the use of the inmates. In general, however, there was no provision of this nature; and when it did exist, the supply was neither adequate, nor were the books selected useful or entertaining.

The practice of treating the sick in their own cells prevails in many of the asylums, even where separate infirmaries have been provided, and we cannot too strongly express our opinion as to the injudiciousness of this course, in cases of serious illness. The cold and confined cells occupied by the patients are quite unsuited for the treatment of disease which confines the invalid to his bed; and it is impossible that the same care, attention, and comforts can be bestowed on patients scattered in distinct apartments over a large building, as in the dormitory of a comfortable and well-heated infirmary. In some instances, cases of severe illness were, from being scattered over the institution, not even brought under the notice of the Visiting or Resident Physician. In other instances, cases of loathsome disease were kept in an associated dormitory, necessarily neglected during the day, and offensive to all around them during the night.

In Belfast Asylum we found a paralytic male patient lying in one of the ordinary single cells, in the month of November, without a fire, or any of the usual hospital appliances. He had been, at the period of our visit, one month confined to bed, and had no attendant but the ordinary keeper of the ward. There was no book or registry kept of the patients who might be ill; and the physician and surgeon were dependent on verbal inquiries for information as to the cases requiring their visits. In the same asylum, we found two patients on the female side, both suffering under abscess, of long standing, who were in single cells, without a fire. While the sick inmates were thus circumstanced there was an infirmary in the institution, well adapted for its object, but used as an ordinary dormitory. On the occasion of our second visit we learned that the infirmary, in the interval, had been fitted up, and applied to its proper uses.

DUBLIN ASYLUM.
Infirmary.

So far back as 1843, the want of an Infirmary in Richmond Asylum (Dublin), had been commented upon by Dr. White, in his evidence before the Lords Committee on Lunatic Poor in Ireland. Since that period an infirmary has been erected on the asylum grounds; it is detached from the buildings occupied by the lunatics, and in a cheerful situation. It is not, however, set apart for the reception of the sick, but is used as a portion of the general accommodation of the house. In Armagh Asylum we found several patients who had been confined to bed in their cold cells, from periods of from ten days to six months, without the appliances requisite for the sick. In Limerick, and other asylums, a like state of things was observable. In Sligo, the infirmary could not be used owing to the offensive effluvia emitted by the main sewer of the building, which ran under it. In Kilmaree the sick patients were treated in the cells and dormitories, while the infirmary was fitted up as a private residence for the clerk and his family. In Clonmel and Carlow the infirmaries which originally existed had been converted into ordinary wards, for the reception of inmates; while, at Ouzagh, the newly-built infirmary was used as a straw store.

In connexion with this subject, we may also observe that there has been great negligence in keeping the usual prescription, dietary, and wine books. In Cork, for instance, where the Resident Manager continues to discharge the duties of Visiting Physician (an office he previously held), we found that, for the two years, 1854 and 1855, the sick-diet book had not been kept; and from 1847 to 1853 there was no entry in the prescription book, the prescriptions being made upon verbal directions given to the apothecary or attendants. In Limerick, no wine or diet book for the sick was kept.

We trust that these irregularities will be corrected by efficient inspection, and that the practice of treating cases of serious illness in the infirmaries or infirmary wards will henceforth prevail; for neither the pressure of accommodation generally, nor the convenience of individual officers of the institution, should be allowed to interfere with an arrangement which a proper regard to the health and lives of the inmates imperatively demands.

Restraint.

We feel it our duty also to notice the culpable disregard with which the 23rd Rule of the Privy Council has in many instances been treated. This rule requires that "The Manager is to take charge of the instruments of restraint, and is not, under any pretence, to allow the unauthorized use of them to any person within the establishment; all cases placed under restraint, seclusion, or other deviation from the ordinary treatment, are to be carefully recorded by him in the daily report, with the particular nature of the restraint or deviation resorted to; but in no case shall the shower-bath be used without the authority of the physician." And, by rule 4, he is to enter in the Morning Statement Book "the names of those under restraint or seclusion, and the causes thereof." In some instances, the Managers informed us that they were not even aware of the Rule, although a printed copy of the Privy Council regulations was furnished to every asylum; in others, that they deemed it a sufficient compliance with the rules to leave the instruments of restraint in charge of the keepers, trusting to their integrity to report the cases in which they were used. In consequence of the Morning Statement Book not being regularly kept in this respect, the Visiting Physician had no record to guide him in the discharge of his duties, under the 47th Rule, which requires, that "the Physician should always visit every patient under restraint, and, when he deems it safe, require such patients to be temporarily relieved from restraint, and examine them, so as to ascertain that they are not cramped or injured; and he should frequently go round the asylum, so as to see the state and condition of every inmate;" this duty was consequently imperfectly performed or totally disregarded.

As an instance of these omissions, we may state what came to our knowledge in Armagh Asylum. On our visiting it we found several of the inmates under restraint. A patient, on the female side, was strapped down in bed, with body-straps of hard leather, three inches wide, and twisted under the body, with wrist-locks, strapped and locked, and with wrists frayed from want of lining to straps; this patient was seriously ill. There was no record of her being under restraint in the Morning Statement Book, as required by the order of the Privy Council. Another female was in the day room, without shoes or stockings, with strait waistcoat and wrist-locks; she had been two years in the house, and almost continually kept in that state day and night. Wrist-locks and body-straps were hung up in the day room, for application at the pleasure of the attendants. A male patient, in Ward No. 2, was found, at our visit, strapped down in bed; in addition, he was confined in a strait waistcoat, with the sleeves knotted behind him; and as he could only lie on his back, from a contrivance we shall presently describe, his sufferings must have been great; his arms were, moreover, confined with wrist-locks of hard leather, and his legs with leg-locks of similar kind; the strapping was so tight that he could not turn on either side; and any change of position was still more effectually prevented by a cylindrical stuffed bolster of ticken, of about ten inches thick, which ran round the sides, and top, and bottom of the bed, leaving a narrow hollow in the centre in which the lunatic was retained, as in a box, without power to turn or move. On liberating the patient, and raising him, he was very feeble, unable to stand, with pulse scarcely perceptible, and feet dark red and cold; the man had been under confinement in this state for four days and nights, being merely raised for purposes of cleanliness.

When examined as to this case, the Manager stated he was aware of the man being in bed, but not of his having all those instruments of restraint upon him. No record of this case of restraint appeared in the Morning Statement Book.

We feel it more necessary to notice this particular instance of disregard of rules, of neglect and cruelty, because we find it stated by the Manager (vide the Eighth Report on the Lunatic Asylums in Ireland, Appendix, page 61), that when mechanical restraint is employed it is under the direction of the Manager or Physician; while it appears from the evidence given before us in this case, that neither the Manager nor Physician had seen or visited this patient while under confinement, or even been aware of his state. It is further stated by the Manager, that the only instruments of restraint in use were a "muff or vest," although we found patients confined in wrist-locks, leg-locks, and body-straps.

In the Carlow Asylum we found that a man suffering from dropsy was tied down to his bed, and locked up in his cell, without the knowledge of the Resident or Visiting Physician.

It is scarcely necessary to say that we recommend that the most strict observance of the rule should be enforced; that all instruments of restraint be kept solely in the custody of the Manager or Resident Physician; that their unauthorized use shall never be permitted, and that all cases of restraint should be daily visited and recorded. We may here mention that in Omagh Asylum we found a bed in use for refractory patients, thus described by the Resident Physician: "It is a wooden bed in the sides, and there is an iron cover which goes over both rails; it is sufficiently high to allow a patient to turn and twist, but he cannot get up . . . the bars are from twelve to fourteen inches above the patient's head."

We now desire to draw attention to the great benefits which the District Asylums of Ireland might be capable of conferring, if made available as educational establishments, for the purpose of extending a knowledge of the nature and treatment of insanity. At present these institutions may be considered as almost effecting nothing towards so important an object.

Lord St. Leonard, when Chancellor of Ireland, exerted himself as a Governor of St. Patrick's Hospital (Swifts) to have clinical instruction given there, and in 1846 an order of the Privy Council was issued, that two clinical clerks should be appointed, under certain regulations, in the Richmond Asylum, in order that they might thereby acquire a knowledge of the treatment of mental disease. Little, however, has been done in accordance with those orders.

It does not appear from the evidence that any step whatever was taken with regard to clinical instruction in Swift's Hospital; and, as regards the Richmond Asylum, no effort has been made, by public notice or advertisement, to obtain clinical clerks; and the person holding the appointment, at the time of our examination, was the apprentice of the apothecary, and, in the opinion of the senior physician, unfitted for the office.

This is to be regretted; for if, as is well known, a superior knowledge of the ordinary maladies of the human frame is best acquired by the medical student who is resident in an hospital, and thus becomes practically conversant with diseases, it will be admitted to be equally true, that similar residence in a lunatic asylum will be the surest means of imparting a knowledge of the many phases of lunacy, and of the physical diseases with which they may be connected or complicated.

It is also to be remembered that, of all departments of medical science, the treatment of insanity is one in which the most important changes and improvements are at present in progress, both in regard to the cure of the disease, and the alleviations which may be afforded, and more especially in reference to the introduction of the non-restraint system, in place of the coercion and cruelties to which insane patients had been formerly subjected. We have to express our regret that even still, in many instances which came before us, the very nature of this system has not appeared to be understood; and that it has been erroneously supposed to consist of a continued struggle of keepers with lunatics; and this error appears to have led frequently to the expression of opinions in favour of the continuance of the employment of mechanical restraint.

We feel confident that, if the lunatic asylums of Ireland were made places of instruction, medical science would be improved and humanity benefited; and that the benefit would not be limited to Ireland, but that the blessing of a humane and enlightened treatment of the insane would be extended through other countries. In 1840, Dr. Davy learned at Hanwell the non-restraint system; and in 1844 he introduced it with singular success into Ceylon.

Recommendation.

We cannot doubt that, if proper exertion were made, students in medicine, or graduates who had just completed their course, would seek for appointments as residents in asylums, as the knowledge thus acquired, and the certificates they would obtain of such residence, would be esteemed recommendations in many positions in which they might afterwards be placed. We would recommend that, in the first instance, the experiment of such appointments should be made in the asylums of Dublin (St. Patrick's and the Richmond), of Cork, and of Belfast, in which towns there are large medical schools; that public notice should be given of the intention of making such appointments, and of the qualifications necessary, which might be that all applicants should be graduates in medicine or surgery, or medical students of at least three years' standing, and one year's attendance on a recognised hospital, and with certificates of good moral character, and of attentive professional habits.

Such Resident Pupils might be appointed by the Board of Governors, on the recommendation of the Resident Physician, and should be subject to his directions. Their duties would consist in keeping notes of the cases admitted, and their treatment, in seeing to the due administration of medicines, baths, &c., and in a general care of the inmates and patients in the intervals of the visits of the Resident or Visiting Physician; in short, in discharging towards the inmates of the asylum such duties as are now performed by Resident Pupils towards the sick in general hospitals. We would propose that the term of residence should be for six months, or, perhaps, it might be advisable to extend it to a longer period; and that, on the expiration of such residence, a certificate should be given by the Resident Physician, or Board of Governors, of the manner in which the duties of the appointment had been fulfilled.

WORKHOUSES.

Lunatic
App. R.

In addition to the lunatic poor in the District Asylums, there is a considerable number in the union workhouses, amounting, on the 1st January, 1857, to 1,707. The returns appended to this report will show the exact number in each workhouse and their classification. These lunatics comprise persons of weak mind, admitted into the workhouse by the Guardians, with a full knowledge of their condition; of those who may have become insane in the workhouse; and, in many unions, of lunatics who have, by an arrangement with the Guardians, been admitted into the workhouse in exchange for more violent cases, transferred to the asylum. The lunatic poor in workhouses are usually accommodated in distinct wards, but several of the more harmless and quiet are allowed to associate with the general inmates.

We have visited several of these establishments, with a view to ascertain the condition of the lunatics resident therein, and the arrangements made for their treatment. In some of the larger unions—those of Dublin, for instance, the number of lunatics in the workhouses was very considerable, amounting to seventy-seven and ninety-six in the North and South Unions, respectively. In both these establishments extensive wards were provided for them, but in the latter that accommodation was in every way unsuitable. These two workhouses differ in their plan from the more modern erections existing generally throughout Ireland. In the latter, lunatic wards were provided in a distinct part of the building, with separate yards attached; but these apartments appear to have been constructed more as punishment cells for refractory paupers than for the object to which they were to be applied. The cells are usually adjoining a small, narrow, day-room, from which they have a borrowed light; and in these gloomy, dungeon-like, apartments, the lunatics are usually confined.

the insane,
cumstanced.

It appears to us that there can be no more unsuitable place for the detention of insane persons than the ordinary lunatic wards of the union workhouses. The unfortunate creatures have commonly no one to attend them but some of the other pauper inmates, who are but little capable, or little inclined, to concern themselves with looking to their wants or necessities. The result is, that the condition of these wards, and the lunatics detained therein, is usually most unsatisfactory. In many cases the bedding is ill-attended to, the persons of the lunatics were often most filthy, their clothing bad, and no effort at cleanliness was observable, in this apparently condemned division of the workhouse. In some workhouses, however, the bodily condition of these afflicted beings was as carefully attended to as in an asylum, though we cannot say that in any their moral treatment was much studied. The cases are, however, generally, chronic or idiotic.

Dietary.

As regards the nourishment of the lunatics in workhouses, they are considered to he more especially in charge of the Medical Officer, who has full power to regulate the dietary; but, where no bodily ailment exists, and the patient is not of weak constitution, it did not appear that any general difference was made between their dietary and that of other inmates. We are of opinion, however, that the ordinary workhouse dietary is unsuited and insufficient for any class of the insane.

On the whole, we do not consider that any lunatics should be detained in workhouses under the present arrangements. The lunatic wards originally constructed, in the modern workhouses, for their reception, are not suitable for that purpose; and the temporary accommodation provided we generally found inadequate and objectionable. We think, therefore, that if the workhouses are to be used for the reception of lunatics of any class, it ought to be under totally different arrangements, and that no recent or acute case, or one for which there is any reasonable hope of cure, should ever be detained therein.

It has appeared to us, however, that a portion of the unoccupied accommodation at present existing in some of the Union Workhouses of Ireland might, under proper arrangements, be made available for quiet cases of imbecility or idiocy.

We should propose, therefore, that one or more workhouses in each district (where the largest amount of spare accommodation is likely to be permanently available) should be selected, and a portion thereof, or the whole, fitted up for the reception of the class of lunatics above referred to, with all proper internal fittings required in asylums, such as baths, &c., and should be provided with airing courts for such as may be enabled to take exercise.

It should be competent to the Board of Governors of any asylum to direct the admission of any lunatic of the above class belonging to the district into the Workhouse Asylum; and, on the recommendation of the Resident Physician of the Asylum, to admit directly to such Workhouse Asylum any such lunatic then in gaol or workhouse, or for whom admission to the District Asylum may be sought. The Governors should also have power to transfer patients, when necessary, from these Auxiliaries to the District Asylums.

No Workhouse Asylum should be open for the reception of patients until duly certified for that purpose by the Central Board, under whose control and direction it should be placed, in like manner as a District Asylum. The Central Board should have power to require (if necessary) that a Resident Medical Officer should be attached to these Auxiliaries. The Board of Governors should have the same control over them as over the District Asylum; but the Board of Guardians, to which the workhouse belongs, should be empowered at all times to visit and inspect. The attendants should not be paupers, but paid servants. The amount to be paid for each lunatic should be matter of agreement and contract between the Board of Governors and the Guardians of the particular Union, and should include a fair allowance for the use of the workhouse premises and the services of the union officers, as well as the particular charge for the care and maintenance of the lunatic. This contract should not be valid until approved by the Central Board of Commissioners in Lunacy. The chargeability of the lunatic should be fixed upon the county from which it shall appear that he was originally admitted into the workhouse or asylum.

It would not be just or reasonable to oblige the unions whose workhouses have thus been, in part, appropriated to the use of a district, to provide, out of their own rates, for the cost of making the necessary alterations, or for the maintenance of the lunatics. We think advances, therefore, should be made out of the Consolidated Fund, through the District Board of Governors; the amount, as in the case of Lunatic Asylums, to be repayable by the several counties, according to the number of patients belonging to each. Under some such regulations, we think accommodation may be suitably provided in the existing workhouses, for lunatics of the imbecile or idiotic, but quiet, class, to which we have referred; but we are distinctly opposed to the detention of lunatics in the workhouses as at present conducted.

A proposition has been made to form the county of Donegal into a separate District, and that one of the workhouses should be appropriated as the District Asylum. We do not approve of that arrangement, as we consider workhouses are not suited for curative hospitals, and that no district should be without a proper and suitably constructed hospital for the curative treatment of the insane.

We are aware that the Committee of the House of Lords, in 1843, reported against the "expediency of appropriating the union workhouses as places either for the custody or the treatment of the insane," and suggested three modes of providing increased accommodation for pauper lunatics—"First, by an increased number of District Asylums; second, an enlargement of these asylums; or third, by the erection of separate establishments, specially appropriated for certain classes of patients, viz., epilepsy, idiocy, and chronic disease." It has been already seen that the first two recommendations have been acted on to a considerable extent. The 8th & 9th Victoria, c. 107, extended the provisions of the law to permit the establishment of a separate asylum, such as that referred to in the third suggestion. The erection, however, of Provincial Asylums, for the reception of particular classes of pauper lunatics, has never been carried out.

It will be seen from the evidence given in the Appendix, that we have constantly endeavoured to elicit opinions in reference to this proposed arrangement; and we think we fairly state the result, when we express our belief that the proposition of Provincial Asylums has not found favour with the great majority of witnesses, either on the score of economy or expediency, although the importance of providing for the accommodation, in separate buildings, of a cheap character, to be appropriated to certain classes of the insane, is considered, in the existing crowded state of the Asylums, to be urgently required. The first cost of erecting Provincial Asylums, such as those contemplated, would be considerable, though less than that of a District Asylum; the amount of expenditure for an indispensable staff of officers would be large, while it does not appear that the cost of maintaining these classes of lunatics would necessarily be less than in the ordinary asylums. There would also be much difficulty in securing the attendance of an active Board of Governors from so large a district. On the whole, we do not recommend the establishment of Provincial Asylums for the reception of lunatics of any classes, whether curable or incurable, belonging to several districts. Our opinion is, that as far as possible, all cases should be treated in the District Asylum; and that if any are to be placed in distinct buildings, they should be those quiet cases of imbecility and idiosyncrasy, which may be considered beyond all curative treatment, and which only need ordinary care and attention. We would not require that all of any class should be removed from the District Asylums, nor would we permit the removal of any who, from being subject to violent paroxysms or other causes, require special care and treatment.

Within the limits indicated we think Auxiliary Asylums may be safely established, and in recommending that the whole or portions of some union workhouses should be appropriated to this purpose, in the manner we have proposed, we do not feel that our opinion conflicts with that of the Committee of the House of Lords, above referred to. We have, on grounds of economy, felt ourselves coerced to consider whether the amount of unoccupied room in the workhouses of Ireland, erected at such cost, might not be made available for affording additional accommodation for the lunatic poor. The effect of the arrangement, as we have proposed, would be to provide for a portion of the chronic cases now crowding the wards of the District Asylums, to secure a more suitable asylum for the present lunatic inmates of the workhouses, and, probably, for a large proportion also of those vagrant lunatics who are at present exposed to neglect, if not cruelty, and whose removal to a proper place of detention is called for by the interests of society in general.

In addition to the union workhouses, we also felt it our duty to visit several of the prisons throughout the country, as being places where the insane may be detained in custody. By the returns appended to this Report it will be seen that on the 1st January, 1857, the number of lunatics in the gaols of Ireland amounted to 164—thus distinguished as to the causes of their detention:—

Lunatic prisoners, who have not been brought up for trial and arraigned, may be transmitted to the District Asylums, and Criminal lunatics to the Central Asylum at Dundrum, but the mass of lunatics committed to the gaols are those classed as "Dangerous lunatics" under 1 Vic., c. 27; and 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107, sec. 10, the provisions of which Acts are peculiar to Ireland.

The presence of the first two classes in the gaols, during a short period, is inevitable, but there should be no delay on the part of the authorities in removing them to the proper asylums in order that they may receive the treatment their condition requires, and that the disturbance of prison order and discipline which they occasion may cease. We shall have further to remark on these cases when referring to the Central Criminal Asylum.

Criminal

The third class, Dangerous lunatics, are committed on warrant of two justices, who, after examination of the lunatic by a duly qualified physician, surgeon, or apothecary, shall be satisfied that such person is a dangerous lunatic, or dangerous idiot, it being, however, further provided that information shall be sworn on oath by one or more credible witnesses, stating facts from which it appears that such person was discovered and apprehended under circumstances denoting a derangement of mind, and a purpose of committing some crime for which, if committed, he or she would be liable to be indicted. These cases may, like the others, be subsequently removed to the District Asylum.

Being satisfied, as well from personal observation as from the evidence given before us, of the absence of any arrangements in goals for the treatment of lunatics, the injury which the introduction of such cases must prove to the good order of the prison, and the bad effects which confinement in a goal must have as regards the lunatic (upon which the witnesses are unanimous who have spoken on the subject), we think that the provisions of the law, allowing of the committal of dangerous lunatics to goals, should be at once repealed.

As, however, it is obvious that such persons cannot with safety be allowed to remain at large, we should propose to give the justices the power of committing them direct to the District Asylum. The order of the magistrates should also be accompanied by a certificate of the medical person who examined the lunatic, which should briefly state the grounds of his opinion as to the patient's insanity, and a report from the constabulary of all facts connected with the case, which they might be able to furnish. The want of such information in these cases has been generally complained of.

The power to commit directly to asylums, in cases where the lunatic is not dangerous, but is not under proper care and control, or is cruelly treated or neglected, is given to the Justices of the Peace in England by the 16 & 17 Vic., cap. 97, sec. 68; and there appears no reason that such a provision as we have suggested should not be embodied in the Irish law.

It may, however, be urged that, in the present crowded state of the asylums, it would be found difficult readily to provide for the accommodation of these cases. The same state of repletion has existed within these latter years as regards the prisons of Ireland; and, all things considered, it appears to us that the burden of providing for these cases, and the duty of receiving them, should rest with the Governors of the institutions provided for their reception, rather than with those of the prisons, erected and maintained for totally different objects.

We may here state that our attention was called, at an early period of our Inquiry, to the operation of this law in the metropolis; and a deputation from the Town Council of the city of Dublin waited upon us to represent that an undue charge fell upon the rate-payers of the city, by reason of the cost of maintaining all dangerous lunatics committed by the Divisional Justices, and who were frequently strangers from different parts of Ireland, being charged to the county of the city of Dublin. We have no doubt that this is the case, to some extent; but we see no remedy which can be devised for transferring this burden to other districts which will not lead to the contentions that a law of settlement involves; while, on the other hand, the evil is one incidental to all large cities whether strangers from adjoining districts are naturally attracted. On this subject we obtained Returns from the police authorities of the city of Dublin of the number of dangerous lunatics committed within the Metropolitan Police District during the five years, commencing with 1852, distinguishing the localities from which such persons had come. From these it appears, that of 539 persons committed in that period, only 48 are described as not belonging to Dublin.

ADEQUACY OF ASYLUM ACCOMMODATION.

Having concluded our observations on the public institutions wherein, under the existing law, the lunatic poor of the country, apart from criminal lunatics, are usually provided for or detained, it will be proper to consider the adequacy of these asylums for the wants of the community.

The returns of lunacy in Ireland, appended to this report show that on the 1st January, 1857, there were in Ireland—

The number of lunatics for whom accommodation remains to be provided, at the public cost, cannot, however, be estimated as equal to that given under the last head; for, doubtless, there are therein included many whose friends would never seek to obtain admission for them into District Asylums. It cannot, however, be doubted, and in some districts it is pressingly felt, that further asylum accommodation, notwithstanding the additional institutions established within the last few years, is urgently required. The following Table of the Lunatic Poor unprovided for in each county, arranged according to Asylum Districts, and of the present accommodation and inmates of each District Asylum, will show where the demand may be supposed to be most urgent, although, as above stated, the actual number unprovided for must be taken as in excess of that absolutely in need of such relief:—

From this it will be observed that the demand for additional accommodation in some districts is urgent and should be met without delay, while the proposed admission of the class of paying patients, the direct committal of dangerous lunatics to the District Asylums, and the number of lunatic poor at large, leave little doubt that a demand for further accommodation will soon be felt elsewhere.

We shall proceed now to indicate, more in detail, the manner in which additional accommodation should, in our opinion, be provided for the lunatic poor.

We consider that the District and Workhouse Asylums should be the only authorized places of detention for the lunatic poor. At present the District Asylums are, to a great degree, deprived of their utility, as curative hospitals for the insane, by the large proportion of probably incurable cases which they contain, as may be judged from the following Table:—

| Asylum.                   | Probably Curable. | Probably Incurable. | Total. | Asylum.                    | Probably Curable. | Probably Incurable. | Total. | Probably curable, and incurable, cases in the District Asylums. |

We think it most desirable that this state of things should, as far as possible, be corrected; and we therefore propose, that besides the removal of such of these cases as are idiotic or imbecile, and quiet, to Workhouse Asylums, additional buildings should, where necessary, be erected, in connexion with the present asylums, for the reception of such cases, as, although incurable, may yet, from their habits, or the dangerous tendency of their insanity, be considered improper cases to be removed from an institution specially devoted to the treatment of lunacy. The District Asylum would therefore contain, in its two departments, all those cases which may be considered as requiring special care and treatment, while the harmless and quiet idiots and imbeciles would be removed to the workhouse asylums.

We entertain strong objections to the erection of asylums upon too large a scale, and, although we are aware that the patients who are considered incurable may call for comparatively little of the Resident Medical Officer's time, yet there are few, if any, asylums in Ireland, where the number of beds in the existing buildings, supposing them all to be occupied by cases not considered incurable, is not more than equal to the extent of attendance which can be afforded by any one individual. We are satisfied, therefore, that the number of District Asylums in Ireland is inadequate to the wants of the country, and will probably be found more so.

We think it very desirable that where a county is large enough to require an asylum, say for 250 patients, it should be separated from the district, and possess an asylum for itself. First, because we are of opinion that these institutions are likely to be better managed by local Governors belonging to one county than by a mixed Board; secondly, because we feel satisfied that the existence of large districts is inconvenient, and injurious to patients who have to be removed from long distances; thirdly, because it practically leads to the inhabitants of the more distant parts not availing themselves of the institution, when their afflicted relatives have to be removed so far from their homes, and consequently the opportunity of visiting them is diminished; and lastly, because all the best authorities agree in condemning very large establishments as unmanageable, since the care of the inmates of a lunatic asylum can never be conducted by classes, as in a workhouse, but must rather be of the character of individual treatment.

In the selection of a site for the asylum the chief town in one or other of the counties has usually been chosen; and while this has had its advantages, arising usually from the contiguity of an abundant market, the residence adjacent of probably the most approved medical practitioner to act as Visiting Physician and the neighbourhood of many local gentry competent to act as Governors; yet, on the other hand, it is to be remembered that the cost of site in such situations is proportionably high, and that the extent of land required for an asylum is, at times, not easily attainable in the immediate vicinity of a county town. Upon the question of site, however, we think that the opinion of the local authorities should be entitled to great weight.

Reviewing, then, the present distribution of Ireland as regards asylum districts, and the probable future requirements of the country, we would propose that—

1. Donegal should be separated from the Derry District, and a new asylum erected at Letterkenny, or some other convenient place, for the former county.
2. Wexford separated from Carlow, and a new asylum erected at Enniscorthy or Wexford (The formation of these two districts appears urgently called for.)

3. The future wants of the present Belfast district can best be met by a separate asylum at Downpatrick for the county of Down.
4. The wants of the metropolitan district will soon call for the separation of one of the component counties; and we should, in that case, be in favour of the erection of an asylum for Louth, Drogheda, and Meath, either at Drogheda or Navan, Meath being detached from the Mullingar district.
5. The county of Clare will, at no distant day, probably, require an asylum for itself, which will naturally be erected at Ennis.
6. The more immediate necessities of Armagh district can only be provided for by detaching one of its counties, say Cavan, and the establishment of a separate asylum for that county.
7. Any additional accommodation in Tipperary must be obtained by a new Asylum at Nenagh, for the North Riding, or a separate and detached building on the present grounds. The situation of Clonmel is, however, inconvenient, as regards the northern part of this large county.
8. The establishment of a separate asylum at Castlebar, for the county of Mayo, would complete the distribution of Ireland into Lunatic Asylum Districts, in a manner fully calculated to meet the wants of the country, so far as we can anticipate they will arise for some time to come.

The law should be altered, so as to meet the case of Tipperary, by allowing the formation of one or more Ridings of a County into a District.

We propose that the Donegal and Wexford districts should be at once formed. In the other cases the additional accommodation required can only be afforded by additional buildings in connexion with the present asylums, by the establishment of Workhouse Asylums, or by the formation of new districts.

In some instances the first of these courses would be inadmissible, either from the present extent of the asylum, or the site not admitting of any considerable extension of the existing buildings, or the ground not affording space for additional buildings. It will be seen, in the evidence of Mr. Wilkinson, that detached buildings, suited to a quiet class of inmates, and which, being adjacent to the old asylums, would not require the usual appendages of kitchen, laundry, &c., could be erected at the rate of £40 per head. It should, however, be borne in mind, if new buildings are erected, that the increase to the number of inmates may render the existing officers inadequate.

We trust that additional buildings will in no cases be sanctioned, unless sufficient ground can be secured for the employment of the inmates.

In addition to the institutions for the custody of the insane maintained out of the public rates, to which we have already referred, there existed, at the time our Commission commenced its labours, an establishment connected with the House of Industry of the City of Dublin, called the Hardwicke Cells, containing thirty-two male and seventy-six female lunatics, who were supported by an annual vote of Parliament.

These lunatics are gradually diminishing in number, as no new cases can be received. They are the remnant of the lunatics belonging to different parts of Ireland, formerly admitted into the House of Industry, which was maintained by Parliamentary grant. This establishment was, by law, under the control of the Poor Law Commissioners, but it does not appear that any regular inspection was made by their officers, or that any effectual steps were taken for securing the good order and government of the institution. At the period of our visit we found these cells and their wretched inmates in a most unsatisfactory state, and reflecting much discredit on all who were connected with its government.

Happily, the attention of the Lord Lieutenant was called to the condition of this establishment, so disgracefully conducted, although under the control of officers appointed by the Executive Government, supported by Parliamentary grant, and in the metropolis, within easy access of the several departments connected with the control and inspection of the institution. The result was that the patients were, in the early part of 1857, removed, by order of Government, to a new establishment at Luen.

Previously to the transfer of these patients, our opinion was solicited by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, and the correspondence on the subject will be found in the Appendix.

We have since visited these lunatics in their new abode, and were much gratified at their evidently improved health and the happy change which their removal from the Hardwicke cells had produced. The house is commodious, airy, and cheerful, and every care and attention appeared to be paid to the wants of the inmates, of whom there were ninety-eight at the period of our visit. They are maintained under a contract with the Government for five years, at the rate of £25 per head, but the dietary has been fixed by the Inspectors of Lunatics, and certain rules have been laid down by them for the management of the institution. There is no regular chaplain attached to the house, but such of the patients as are fit are allowed to go out and attend their respective places of worship, while the clergy of all persuasions have access to the establishment. In this respect, the arrangements are similar to those in most private lunatic asylums. As the lunatics in this establishment are, for the most part, quiet and orderly, there may not be any great inconvenience in their being sent out to attend Divine Worship, but we think it would be right that, in this as in all other public asylums, provision should be made for the celebration of religious worship within the building, and for the attendance of chaplains. On the occasion of our visit, one of the lunatics, a Presbyterian, particularly complained of his having no clergyman to communicate with, there being none in the vicinity, and in that respect regretted having been removed from Dublin.

THE CENTRAL CRIMINAL ASYLUM.

The only remaining establishment for lunatics maintained at the public expense is the Central Criminal Asylum, at Dumdum.

This institution, recommended by the Committee of the House of Lords in 1843, was established under the provisions of the 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107, and opened for the reception of Criminal Lunatics in 1850. It is most agreeably situated, on the south side of Dublin, and was constructed for the accommodation of 120 patients. The building, being one of the most recently erected, is provided with all modern improvements, although we fear that their actual value is not in all cases realized, for here, as elsewhere, complaints were made that the arrangements for heating and ventilation were most defective. The observation we have made as to the general absence of any means of amusement for the patients, or of any prints or pictures to relieve the monotony of the whitened walls, in the day-rooms and galleries, apply equally to this Asylum, which, in general, appears to be well conducted, under the direction of a resident Medical Officer.

This establishment is under the special superintendence of the Inspectors of Lunatics; but rules have been framed by the Lord Lieutenant in Council for its conduct and management. We propose to place it directly under the control of the Central Board, who shall have power, with the Lord Lieutenant's approval, to revise and make new regulations.

The number for which the asylum has been constructed is not adequate to the wants of the country; but it will admit of being extended at either wing, and, if the object of a Central Criminal Asylum is to separate that class from other lunatics, such an enlargement cannot be longer delayed; for the evidence will show that the number of criminal lunatics not confined at Dumdum, is not to be estimated only by the number remaining in goals.

necessary.

The 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107, s. 8, enacted, that whenever and as soon as the said Central Asylum shall be erected and fit for the reception of criminal lunatics, it shall be lawful for the Lord Lieutenant to order and direct that all criminal lunatics then in custody in any lunatic asylum or goal, or who shall thereafter be in custody, shall be removed without delay to such Central Asylum, and shall be kept therein as long as such criminal lunatics respectively shall be detained in custody. By the interpretation clause of the Act, the word "criminal lunatic" is declared to mean any person acquitted on the ground of insanity, or found to have been insane under the provisions of 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 33. A further clause provided that the Lord Lieutenant (if he should think fit) might direct persons under sentence of imprisonment or transportation to be removed to the Central Asylum, and there detained until it is certified that they are of sound mind, in which case they are to be remitted to prison for completion of their term of sentence, or discharged.

lunatics.

At the opening of the asylum, the number of lunatics in asylums and goals, coming under the above classes, exceeded the available accommodation, and a selection had therefore to be made, and such continues to be the rule. The evidence of the Inspector, Dr. Nugent, shows that preference is generally given, in this selection, rather to cases of heinous crime than of aggravated lunacy; but, at the same time, when persons show violent and dangerous symptoms, though their crimes may not have been very bad, they are transferred to the asylum as a place of safe custody. A practice also exists of sending back criminal lunatics who have not recovered their reason to the asylum of the district from which they originally came; while, as the section of 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107, above quoted, is held by the Law Officers of the Crown not to be mandatory, there still remain in the District

Law not

Asylums cases of criminal lunatics for whom, it would appear, that this asylum was specially erected.

We would direct particular attention to the evidence of Dr. Nugent on the whole of this subject, because it appears to us that the effect of the interpretation given to the law as to the non-removal of criminal lunatics from the District Asylums, and the practice of sending back criminal lunatics to those District Asylums is inconsistent with the object for which this institution was established, namely, the separation of this class from other lunatics. The Act of Parliament appears to us to have specially designed, as its title indicates, "the establishment of a Central Asylum for insane persons charged with offences," and such classes are by the 8th section directed to be removed thereto; the power, however, which is further given, of removing lunatics sentenced to imprisonment or transportation, is discretionary. It appears to us, that either perfect dissociation of all lunatics who have committed, or have been charged with, crime should be enforced, or that a distinction must be drawn, having reference to the moral stain resting on the patient. In the latter sense the cases of the lunatics acquitted on the ground of insanity, at the time of committing crime, bear the lightest taint, while the lunatic who has been convicted, and whose insanity has subsequently supervened, is fully stained with crime. We think that the law should explicitly define who is to be detained in the criminal asylum; and as care is not the only object with which such an institution has been founded by the State, the incurable inmate should not, because his case is hopeless, and he may himself be harmless, be again remitted to association with lunatics who are not criminal.

PROPOSED CENTRAL BOARD, AND GENERAL ALTERATIONS IN THE LAW.

We shall now proceed to indicate the system under which it seems to us the Control and Direction of Lunatic Asylums and the Superintendence of Lunatics in Ireland should henceforth be conducted.

We propose that all the Asylums for the reception of the Insane in Ireland, public and private, and those supported by public rates, or maintained by private endowment or benevolence, shall be under the Direction and Superintendence of a Central Board, to whom should likewise be intrusted certain powers in reference to cases of single patients, such as we shall hereafter describe.

tion of.

In our opinion, this Board should consist of three salaried members, two of whom should be members of the medical, and one of the legal profession; and a Secretary, and such establishment of clerks as the Treasury may approve, should be attached to it.

It will be observed that we do not propose, as is the case in England and Scotland, to associate any unpaid Commissioner with the salaried Commissioners; first, because we do not think that any unpaid members, whose services could be made available for the purpose, would give additional weight to the authority of the Board; secondly, because it is not likely a regular attendance would really be insured on the part of persons so appointed, and whose position and ability might point them out as qualified for the discharge of the duties belonging to the Board; lastly, because we think it of great importance that the Commissioners should not merely sit at the Central Office, to order and direct the management of the asylums, but that they should be themselves kept constantly informed of the actual condition of the asylums and the lunatics under their control, by discharging the duties of inspection.

of.

We propose, therefore, that each District, Public, and Workhouse Asylum, shall be visited twice in every year, that the visit shall be made by the Medical Commissioners alternately, and that on the occasion of one of the visits the Legal Commissioner shall be associated with the Medical Commissioner.

Reports, &c.

The Commissioners should, on the occasion of each visit, record their observations in a minute book, to be kept for that purpose, and to be laid before the Governors at their next meeting, and copies of the same should be transmitted at once to the Central Board. They should also make a distinct Report, once in each year, upon each asylum, the same to be transmitted to the Board of Governors and Grand Juries of each county in the district. These reports should be annually laid before Parliament, along with a general report from the whole Board of Commissioners.

Powers of
sioners.

We consider that the Commissioners should not confine their visits to these statutable inspections. They should have power to enter and visit the asylums at all times, to attend meetings of the Boards of Governors, and take part in the proceedings, but not to vote, thus assimilating their position to that of the Poor Law Inspectors in reference to Boards of Guardians. We also consider that, as occasion may call for special inquiries, the Commissioners should have authority, with the sanction of the Lord Lieutenant, to appoint their Secretary, or any other competent person, to be a special Inspector, for a limited period in each case, such Inspector having, as well as the Commissioners, the power of examining on oath.

The existing law requires from the Inspectors of Lunatics an amount of duty, in the way of inspection, beyond what they could adequately perform.

By 8 & 9 Vic., cap. 107, they are bound annually to visit every asylum for lunatics, as well as all gaols, workhouses, or houses of industry, in which there shall be, or be alleged to be, any lunatic; and by the 5 & 6 Vic., c. 123, every licensed house is to be visited half-yearly. The amount of visitation this would probably entail may be judged of from the following Table:—

| Institution.             | Number. | Number remainingLunatics on1st January, 1857. |

| Workhouses, . . . .      | 168     | 137                                                   |

| Lifford Cells, . . . .   | 1       | 1                                                     |
| Governments Prisons, .   | 5       | 1                                                     |
| Charitable Institutions, | 2       | 2                                                     |
| Total, . . . . .         | 244     | 219                                                   |

Should our recommendations be adopted, the duties of inspection will be limited to district, private, charitable, and such auxiliary workhouse asylums as may be established, together with a visitation of single patients, as hereinafter referred to.

We think that three Commissioners will, for the present, be adequate to the discharge of this duty, together with their labours at the Central Office; and we consider it would be improper that a Board charged with such extensive powers should consist of less than three members. Two Commissioners should constitute a quorum.

We think that the whole code of law, under which the Privy Council and Commissioners for Control and Correspondence intervene in the formation of districts, and the control and direction of asylums, should be repealed, and that one general enactment should be introduced for the government and regulation of all asylums, public or private.

We would propose to assign to the Central Board the duty of ascertaining, in the first instance, whether additional asylum accommodation was required for any district, and how it might best be provided. The Board should transmit their opinion to the Lord Lieutenant, and the Governors of the asylum or asylums for the districts concerned; and should the Board of Governors not proceed within a limited time to provide additional accommodation, in the manner in which the Central Board recommend, it should then be lawful for the Lord Lieutenant, on the requisition of the Commissioners, to require the Board of Governors to provide such additional accommodation, in such manner as the Commissioners in that requisition may have set forth.

Where a new district is to be formed, it should be lawful for the Lord Lieutenant, at the expiration of six months from the time of such report being laid before the Governors, to form such new district, with such alterations as may appear desirable, to appoint a Board of Governors for the asylum of such newly-constituted district, and to require them to erect an asylum therein, forthwith, for such number of patients as the Central Board, in their report, may have fixed.

As soon as the order of the Lord Lieutenant has been received, or as soon as any Board shall have determined, acting on the report of the Central Board, to erect a new asylum, or enlarge an asylum, or provide additional buildings in connexion with any existing asylum, then it should be the duty of the Board of Governors to prepare plans of such buildings or asylums, and also maps of the land proposed to be taken, or of the site for any such asylum or buildings, and to furnish copies of the same to the Central Board, without whose approval it should not be competent for the Governors to purchase any land or contract for the erection of any buildings or asylums.

We propose that the purchase-money of the site and the money required for the erection of the new asylum or buildings may be advanced by the Treasury to the Board of Governors, on their requisition, accompanied by a certificate of the Central Board, the same to be repaid by imperative presentment on the counties, as at present. The proportion in which such presentment should be made by each county, and the repayments to be made by the several counties, in case of counties detached to form a new district, should be fixed by the Central Board, with appeal to the Privy Council.

The sites of the asylums should be vested in trustees, to be named by the Board of Governors, who should have the same power of taking land as the Commissioners for Control at present possess, and incapacitated persons should have full power to convey to them.

The amount of purchase-money may be advanced in one sum by the Treasury. In the case of the erection of new asylums or buildings, we think a full estimate—1st, of the probable cost of such buildings; 2nd, of the cost of interior fittings; and 3rd, of the cost of furnishing and providing clothing and every thing necessary for the reception of patients, should be furnished to the Commissioners, together with the plans; and approved copies of these estimates should also be furnished to the Treasury, and the issues should not exceed them in amount.

The contract for the execution of the building should be made by the Board of Governors, subject only to the approval of the Commissioners; and the building should not be taken up from the contractor, or the asylums or buildings opened for the reception of patients, without their sanction. It should be competent to the Commissioners to appoint an architect to report upon the state of the works and building, as well during execution as on completion, in order that they may satisfy themselves of the propriety of granting a certificate for a further advance from the Treasury, or of finally releasing the contractor.

We have intimated before that we do not propose to alter the arrangement by which advances from the Treasury are made for the maintenance of the asylums. We think the estimates for these advances, and the issues, should be regulated in the same manner as we have proposed in respect to the erection of buildings.

We have already stated how far we consider the Central Board should interfere in reference to the appointment or removal of officers and the regulation of their salaries. It is our wish to limit the authority of the Board, as far as is consistent with the efficiency of the institutions, and securing the proper operation of the law in regard to lunatics.

The first duty of the new Board will be the preparation of proper forms of admission and discharge, &c., and the formation of a code of rules for the government of the asylums, in which the duties of each officer shall be clearly set forth, and the meetings of the Governors and course of proceeding thereat regulated. We see no reason why the Privy Council should be troubled with the consideration of these regulations. We prefer their approval being left to the Lord Lieutenant, as the responsible representative of the Executive in this country; and that no rules, therefore, shall be in force until approved by him. Alterations in those rules, if required, should be made from time to time, with like authority.

As regards the direct authority of the Central Board, we are further of opinion that they should have power, where they may see fit, to regulate the dietary in any asylum, and also to direct the transfer of any lunatic from any workhouse to a District Asylum.

We reserve our recommendations as to the power of the Central Board in other matters until we have explained our view in reference to the other institutions for the insane.

We shall next proceed to the consideration of the law as regards private lunatic asylums in Ireland and the condition of these institutions.

PRIVATE ASYLUMS.

Previously to the year 1826 there does not appear to have been any legislative enactment in reference to these establishments.

The 7 Geo. IV., c. 74, before noticed, commonly known as the Prisons Act, included, as we have seen, in its fifty-fifth and following sections, a provision for the inspection of "every madhouse and place where lunatics or idiots are confined, whether the same be a public establishment or kept for profit by any private individual; and the Inspectors-General of Prisons were bound to report to the Lord Lieutenant on the state thereof."

There did not, however, exist any special law for the licensing of these establishments, or any means of securing their proper management, until 1842, when the 5 & 6 Vic., c. 123, was passed, "to make further provision for the licensing, regulation, and inspection of private lunatic asylums in Ireland."

This act was passed, in the first instance, for three years, but has been since continued by several renewing acts, the last of which, 18 & 19 Vic., c. 76, extended its duration till the first day of August, 1860, and the end of the then next session of Parliament. It is therefore by the law as enacted in the 5 & 6 Vic., c. 123, that the private lunatic asylums of Ireland are at present regulated.

The first section of this Act declared the Inspectors-General of Prisons, whose duty it had theretofore been to inspect and report on the private asylums, to be Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums for the purposes of the Act. These duties, however, like all others connected with lunatic asylums, were, by a subsequent Act, 8 & 9 Vic., c. 107, s. 23, transferred to the newly-appointed Inspectors of Lunatics, and are by them discharged at the present time.

The provisions of the 5 & 6 Vic., c. 123, required that no person should keep a house for the reception of two or more insane persons in Ireland, unless licensed by the Justices in quarter sessions; that every applicant for a licence should give previous notice to the Clerk of the Peace, stating the number of each sex he proposes to receive; the name and previous occupation of the person who is to superintend the institution, should he not be resident himself; accompanied by a plan of the house, detailing the length, breadth, and height of every room; and giving also a description of the situation of the house. Any additions or alterations made to any licensed house afterwards are to be notified to the Clerk of the Peace within one month. A form of licence was given in a schedule to the Act, and the Clerk of the Peace was authorized to receive a fee of 10s. for every insane person proposed to be received, but so as in the whole not to exceed £5, besides 10s. for the stamp. Copies of the notice, plan, and licence were to be sent to the Inspectors within four clear days after granting such licence; and a copy of the plan is also required to be hung up in some conspicuous part of every licensed house. The moneys received for such licences were, in the first instance, to be applied to the payment of the expenses required to be disbursed in the execution of the Act. The licence was to be in force for thirteen months. On the death of the licensed person, and on application of his legal representative, the Justices, at next quarter sessions, are empowered to confirm the licence to the Superintendent, or such other person as they may think fit, for the unexpired term of the licence. Analogous powers are given to the justices, in case of the licensed person becoming incapable, or the house having become by fire, tempest, or other unavoidable calamity, unfit to be occupied. The licence can, by the 13th section, be at any time revoked by the Lord Chancellor on the recommendation in writing of the Inspectors, seven clear days' notice of such intended recommendation having been previously given to the person complained of.

As regards the reception of patients into these licensed houses, the law requires that no person shall be received or detained therein without an order under the hand of the person by whose direction such insane person has been sent, according to a form given in a schedule to the Act, which included a statement of the degree of relationship or other circumstances of connexion of the lunatic with the person signing the order, a statement of the name and previous occupation of the lunatic, of where he had been previously confined, and whether he had been found of unsound mind under a Chancery Commission. A medical certificate of the patient's insanity, signed by two physicians, surgeons, or apothecaries, who had each visited him separately not more than seven days before, is also required; and, finally, the substance of these orders and certificates is to be entered within three clear days in a book kept for this purpose in the licensed house. It is further provided, that if a patient has not been visited by two medical men signing this certificate, the reasons shall be assigned therein, and a second medical practitioner is required to visit him within fourteen days. Moreover, no physician who is proprietor of a licensed house, or superintendent thereof, or their immediate relative, is allowed to sign these certificates. The reception of inmates in the licensed houses is required to be notified to the Inspectors within two days, together with copies of the orders and certificates; and a register of these notices, as well as of the copies of orders and certificates, is to be kept by the Inspectors.

Notices of deaths, escapes, and removals are also required to be given to the Inspectors. In cases where the Licensed Houses are not kept by a medical practitioner, they are to be visited by a medical man at least once a fortnight, and a statement then entered in the books of the health of each patient and the condition of the house.

The duties of the Inspectors, as regards these establishments, are distinctly laid down in the 20th and 21st sections.

1. Each house and every part thereof are to be visited by one Inspector at least once in six months.
2. The Inspector is to inquire whether any patients are under restraint, and why.
3. To inspect the certificate of admission of every patient admitted since his last visit.
4. To make a minute of the result of his inspection and inquiries, of the condition of the house, and of any irregularities in the certificates.
5. On the first visit after the grant of the licence, to examine and sign it, if correct, otherwise to note the informality in the Visiting Book.
6. To inquire whether any, and at what time, divine service is read, and what religious aid is received. If divine service is not performed, or religious communication with any minister is not permitted, the proprietor or resident superintendent is bound to state the reasons thereof in the book above referred to.

PRIVATE
ASYLUMS.

7. To inquire what description of employment, amusement, or recreation is provided; and state the results of such inquiries in the Visiting Book, with such observations as he may think useful or necessary.

Copies of the minutes of the Inspector are to be sent to the Clerk of the Peace, who is to enter them in a book, and lay them before the justices previously to the consideration of any renewal of the licence.

Patients'
kept in.

A Patients' Book is required to be kept in each house, in which the Visiting Inspector is to insert any observations he may think fit respecting the state of mind of any patient; and the Inspector, on his visit, is required to give special attention to the state of mind of any patient as to the propriety of whose detention he shall have cause to doubt, or to whose sanity his attention may be called by the patient, or any other person; and if it appears to him that the patient's detention requires further consideration, the Inspector is required to make a minute to that effect in the Visiting Book.

visits to.

Power is then given to the Inspectors, in conjunction with the Manager and Medical Officer of the nearest District Asylum, to make special visits to a licensed house, and to make order for the discharge of a patient, if it appear to them fit. The latter power does not extend to Chancery or Criminal Lunatics, in which cases the Inspector is to report his opinion on the case to Lord Chancellor, or Lord Lieutenant, respectively.

Night visits to.

The 32nd section gives power to an Inspector to visit Licensed Houses at night, after information upon oath has been laid before him that mal-practices are believed to have taken place therein which cannot be ascertained by examination during the day.

Information as to
detained in.

The Inspectors are to give information, if they see fit, to persons inquiring as to the detention of insane persons in licensed houses. This last enactment became necessary, as the Inspectors in their capacity of Inspector of Private Asylums, are, by their oath of office, (sec. 2) bound to secrecy.

Inspectors.

The Inspectors are bound to report annually to the Lord Lieutenant and Lord Chancellor. They are armed with power to summon parties before them, and to examine on oath; and persons giving false evidence are declared guilty of perjury, and subjected to penalties recoverable by civil bill. It is also provided by the Act, that after twelve months from the death or discharge of any patient his name may be erased from the register of any house where he was confined, and all orders and certificates regarding him be given up.

Proprietors.

Two further sections, 47 and 48, refer to proceedings against proprietors of licensed houses, and limitation of actions under the Act, the principal of which is, that in any action brought against any proprietor for detaining or ill-treating any of Her Majesty's subjects, insane or alleged to be insane, he shall be bound to justify his conduct according to the course of common law.

Institutions
to which 5 & 6 Vic.
c. 123,
extends.

Finally, the 5 & 6 Vic., c. 123, is declared by the 49th section not to extend to any public hospital or charitable institution, supported wholly or in part by voluntary contributions, and not kept for profit by any private individual, or to any institution supported wholly or in part by Grand Jury presentments or Parliamentary grants of public money, except so far as it relates to visitations directed by the Lord Chancellor, and inquiries to be made by the Inspectors in the discharge of their former duties, under 7 Geo. IV., c. 74.

There are only three institutions in Ireland, that we are aware of, exempt from the provisions of the Act, as Benevolent Institutions; but to these we shall subsequently have occasion to refer.

The above is a summary of the provisions of the law relative to private lunatic asylums, or licensed houses. However this legislation may now call for amendment, yet the introduction of the Act 5 & 6 Vic., c. 123, was a most important measure. Until this enactment came into force, private asylums were regulated by no law, and no security existed for their being either properly conducted, or suitable for the reception of lunatics.

Licensing.

We shall now proceed to give our opinion as to the amendment of this law.

The system of licensing by the Justices, at Quarter Sessions, does not appear to us to have worked well. The tribunal cannot be considered the most competent to decide on the fitness of the establishment for the object to which it is to be appropriated. The Inspectors of Lunatics, who would appear to be the more proper parties to determine on the propriety of licensing a building as a private asylum, are not, by the law as it now stands, required to give any certificate to that effect, or to make a report previously to the licence being granted. It is true, that in a subsequent year, the minutes of their visits being laid before the Justices, may induce the latter, in case of any condemnatory remarks, to refuse a continuance of the licence; but there is always more reluctance to take this step than to refuse originally to issue the licence.

We propose that the power of issuing licences shall rest with the Board of Commissioners, after they have satisfied themselves of the qualification and capacity of the applicant, and by personal inspection, of the fitness of the building for the reception of lunatics, the power of revoking licences to rest with the Lord Chancellor, on the recommendation of the Commissioners. Fees charged for licences are considered so vexatious, and produce, in the aggregate, so insignificant an amount, that we recommend their abolition, stamp duty only being charged.

PRIVATE
Licences.

The Proprietors should be bound to send in plans of all buildings, and proposed alterations of buildings, to the Commissioners, and no new buildings should be erected, or alterations made in the licensed premises, without their previous sanction; nor should any new or altered buildings be used, until certified by the Commissioners as fit for occupation, under penalty of forfeiture of the licence.

houses.

We think that the licence should require, in all cases, that some medical practitioner should be resident on the premises—being either the proprietor himself (if a professional person), or some medical Superintendent appointed by him.

Resident
practitioner.

The reception of patients may be regulated according to the existing law, with this difference, that the statement of the person giving the order for the lunatic's reception should be more complete. We should recommend the adoption of the form appended to the English Act, 16 & 17 Vic., c. 96, with some slight additions. We consider it desirable that the order for reception should show, not alone the relationship to the lunatic (if any) of the person signing, but also should state who are next of kin to the lunatic, and whether they are aware of the order being made, and are consenting parties to the detention of their relative.

Order for
patients.

The provisions of the 5 & 6 Vic., c. 123, relative to the discharge of patients by Inspectors of Lunatics, after special visit, in conjunction with the Manager and Medical Officer of a District Asylum, should, in principle, be retained; but the power should be transferred to any one of the proposed Commissioners after a certificate of the sanity of the patient, signed by two Medical Practitioners, had been laid before him.

of patients.

It should be lawful for any of the Commissioners, or Inspectors, to give an order for the admission of relatives or friends of a patient to any Licensed House, or of any medical person the relatives or friends may desire should visit a patient. We also consider it desirable that some provision, analogous to the 86th section of the 8th & 9th Vic., cap. 100, authorizing the temporary removal of any patient from a licensed house, for a definite time, for the benefit of his health, should be extended to Ireland.

of friends.

Another provision of the English Act, not alone as regards licensed houses, but lunatics in general, might, with advantage, be adopted, viz., that any abuse, ill-treatment, or wilful neglect of a lunatic by the Superintendent, or any other person employed in the care of lunatics, should be deemed a misdemeanor, and punishable accordingly. We would also propose to give power to the Lord Lieutenant, on the report of the Commissioners, to direct a prosecution in any such case on the part of the Crown, or in cases where the Commissioners shall report that any person has been unlawfully taken and confined in any asylum.

Temporary
patients.Provision as
generally.

As regards the inspection of licensed houses, we consider they should be visited by one or more of the Commissioners four times in each year, and their visits should be duly recorded in a book to be specially kept for that purpose, together with such observations as the condition of the establishment may call for, copies of which observations should be sent to the Central Board forthwith. The duties of inspection may remain as prescribed in the twenty-first section of the existing act, and hereinbefore referred to.

Inspection
sioners.

The power of making night visits to licensed houses is confined by the Irish Act to cases where information on oath has been received that malpractices are suspected to have taken place, and which cannot be detected by examination and inspection during the day. By the English Act night visits may be made at the discretion of the Commissioners. We consider it advisable to assimilate the law in this respect, first, because we consider that an information, amounting to a suspicion, is of little value, if intended to be a protection against an abuse of this power of night visitation; and secondly, because we believe that if it were permitted to the Inspectors or Commissioners, at their discretion, to visit private asylums at that time, they would be better enabled to judge of the condition of the establishment, and the manner in which the patients are treated, than by the visits which are made, at an hour when their presence may more naturally be looked for. At present in Ireland, there is almost a certainty on the part of the proprietor that no night visits will take place, and, in fact, we find from the returns of the Inspectors, that none have ever been made.

Extension
visits.

We have now stated the provisions of the law in reference to private asylums, and alluded to those points which appear to us to require amendment. We consider that an amended Law should be passed for the regulation of these establishments, and that, once enacted, its provisions should be rigidly enforced. Such has not hitherto been the case in all respects.

Necessity
the law as to private asylums.

PRIVATE
ASYLUMS.

We visited one asylum where the proprietor had allowed the quarter sessions to pass without taking out his licence; in another this omission was stated to have occurred, from the Inspectors not having sent in their report, or, in other words, we presume that the minutes which, by the Act, they were required to make, had not been entered in the Visiting Book, and, consequently, that no copies thereof were in the hands of the Clerk of the Peace. In some few cases we found that the medical certificates and orders on which the patients were admitted were not forthcoming, in others not in due form. At times the books required by the Act to be kept could not be produced; and the plan of the building was not always, as the Act requires, hung up in a conspicuous part of the licensed house, or when hung up, did not accurately delineate the premises licensed and occupied; indeed we found female patients sleeping in the house, or portion of a house, stated to be set apart for males, and we were informed by one of the patients that she had slept there for three years.

In another case, we found that a lady had for some time previously slept in one of a range of small dark cells, on the male side, although it had been represented to us, by the Proprietor, that these rooms had for a long period been disused, in consequence of their having been condemned by the Inspectors. The cells were, however, retained on the plan, as a portion of the licensed premises.

The private asylums, generally, are not well adapted for their purpose. They are usually old mansions, or private houses, which have been converted to their present use, and their arrangements are not convenient for the purposes of an asylum. Where additions have been made, they have usually been erected apparently more with the object of extending the accommodation by crowding a number of rooms into the small space available, than of erecting suitable apartments for the reception of insane patients. Where a totally new building has been erected these observations do not apply.

We may remark, however, that we were not satisfied with the accommodation provided in most of these institutions, and that they did not contain those necessary conveniences which a house for the reception of the insane particularly requires. Some are not fit houses to be licensed, and the evidence of Dr. Nugent shows that he himself inclines to that opinion. He speaks, however, of a gradual improvement, and of the difficulty of finding accommodation for the patients elsewhere. But we cannot think it desirable that, upon any consideration of this nature, a house should be licensed which is unsuitable in itself, or so ill-conducted as to be unfit for the reception of lunatics. It is true that the amount annually paid by the friends of the lunatics is at times miserably small; but we should prefer such patients either being sent to a District Asylum, or even detained with their friends, to the sanction of the law being given for their reception into a house utterly unfit for their abode, and affording no means for their proper treatment. We trust that, under the new arrangements we propose, the refusal of licences to all houses not properly suited for the purpose will be rigidly acted upon, and that all the provisions of the law as regards these institutions will be strictly enforced.

The distinctions of social life naturally prevent the association of lunatics of all classes in the same asylum; neither would it be proper that, in the treatment of insanity, all consideration of the previous position in society of these afflicted persons should be lost sight of. Hence, private asylums are a necessity, but we confess that we should gladly see the existing establishments of that class in Ireland give place to institutions of a self-supporting character, and where this most helpless class would be cared for and maintained without reference to the profits to be derived from their infirmity. It is not to be expected that individuals will invest their capital, the source of support for themselves and their families, without looking for as large an income in return as it can fairly be made to produce, or that they will devote their time, labour, and skill as professional men, to the care of the insane, from purely philanthropic motives. Yet it cannot but be observable in a private asylum, how limitedly the patient's wants seem to be discerned where they are not absolute necessities; how little the agreeable is studied where it is not the essential; and how strong the tendency must be to restraint, since the opposite system, if carried out, will necessarily require an increased number of attendants, at increased cost, and therefore diminished profit, to the proprietor. In fact, without seeking to reproach any, we fear it must be confessed by all that, where profit is the aim, it will too generally be pursued to the prejudice of those from whom it is derived. With these views, we would desire to see institutions established for the reception of that class of lunatics whose social position places them above receiving support from public funds, or seeking to be maintained by private charity, and yet whose humble means will not admit of their being placed, as single patients, where funds as well as friends will not be wanting to insure their comfort. Such an asylum conducted under proper management, and where the patients should pay the full cost of their maintenance, including establishment charges, &c., would be an incalculable boon to society, and we cannot but hope that in a city so remarkable for the charity of its inhabitants as Dublin, the tide of benevolence may one day turn in this direction.

Desirability

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

We have classed, under the head of Benevolent Institutions for the care and treatment of the Insane, those establishments which are neither supported by local rate, nor out of the public taxes, and which, at the same time, are not kept for profit by any private individual. The only asylums of this character in Ireland are St. Patrick's Hospital (founded by Dean Swift), Bloomfield Retreat, under the direction of a Committee of the Society of Friends, and St. Vincent's Asylum, Richmond, recently established from the proceeds of a charitable bequest under the management of trustees.

The first of these institutions owes its origin, as is well known, to the celebrated Dean of St. Patrick's, above mentioned, who "bequeathed his whole estate and effects, subject to certain small pecuniary and specific legacies, to be laid out in the purchase of land in any province of Ireland (except Connaught), the yearly profits to be applied, in the first instance, to the purchase of a site near Steevens's Hospital, in the city of Dublin, or if that could not be had, in or near the city of Dublin, and then in building thereon an hospital, large enough for the reception of as many idiots and lunatics as the annual income of the said lands and effects should be sufficient to maintain."

St. Patrick's
history of.

The Dean's will, dated the 3rd of May, 1740, further provided, that the hospital should be built in such a manner that another building might be added thereto, in case the endowment thereof should be enlarged. "That when the said hospital should be built the whole yearly income of the said lands and estates should for ever thereafter be laid out in providing victuals, clothing, medicines, attendance, and all other necessities for such idiots and lunatics as should be received into the same, and in repairing and enlarging the building from time to time; that if a sufficient number of idiots and lunatics should not be readily found, incurables should be taken in; that no person labouring under infectious disease should be admitted; that all such idiots, lunatics, and incurables should live and reside therein constantly, as well in the night as in the day; and that the salaries of agents, receivers, officers, servants, and attendants, to be employed in the business of the hospital, should not, in the whole, exceed one-fifth part of the clear yearly income or revenue thereof."

Will of Dean
Swift, 1740.

As regards the management of the estates the Dean provided in his will that his executors should not have power to lease lands without the consent of certain official persons therein named, or a majority of them; that no leases should be made other than for years, not exceeding thirty-one in possession, at the best and most improved rents that might reasonably and moderately be gotten, and without fine. Finally, that any lease made to, or in trust for, any person in any way concerned in the execution of the trust, or in any way related or allied by consanguinity or affinity to them, should be void.

The will concluded by directing his executors to apply to the Crown for a charter to incorporate them, and the official persons above referred to, namely, the Primate, Lord Chancellor, Archbishop of Dublin, Dean of St. Patrick's, Dean of Christ Church, Physician to the State, and Surgeon-General, were to be a corporation for the better management and conduct of the charity, to which corporation the estates should be conveyed over by his executors, or the survivors of them.

In 1746, a charter was accordingly obtained, in conformity to the wishes of Dean Swift, and the Corporation of Governors of St. Patrick's Hospital constituted. It consisted of the seven dignitaries above mentioned, and seven other persons whose successors were to be elected by a majority of the Governors, each of whom was required to be a fit person, whose usual place of residence for three years then next preceding had been in the city or suburbs of Dublin; seven were required to concur in the election, of whom the Primate, Lord Chancellor, or Archbishop of Dublin should be one.

Charter of Incorporation,
1746.

The charter gave the usual privileges of a corporation to the Governors, and provided a certain course of proceeding in the administration of the trust. Four quarterly meetings were to be held, viz., on the first Monday in May, August, November, and February, at which alone leases were to be made, and such other general meetings (three being a quorum) as the Governors might think fit. On the first Monday in November in each year an election of officers was to take place. Seven members of the corporation were to be named a committee for carrying into execution the rules, ordinances, instructions, and directions of the Board, and were to meet on the first Tuesday in every month, or oftener, as circumstances should require. The Governors, at their quarterly meetings, had power to make such rules and ordinances, which were to be approved by either of the chiefs of the courts of law.

The charter enabled the trustees to purchase or hold land to the extent of £2,000 a-year, and any amount of personality whatsoever, and provided that all gifts or bequests of money should be lent out at interest, or invested in lands, until the clear yearly income amounted to £2,000, unless it were otherwise directed by the donor.

BENEFICIARY INCOME-
TIONS.

The charter provides that the salaries should not exceed one-fifth of the yearly income. At present they do not appear to amount to that proportion of the income derived from all sources.

Income of
St. Patrick's
Hospital.

The income of the hospital, according to a return we have received, was, for the year ending 31st March, 1856, £5,212 13s.,<sup>a</sup> under the following heads:—

|                                                                             |       |    |    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------|----|----|
| Rents, after deducting agent's fees, and all rent and taxes, &c., . . . . . | £     | s. | d. |
| Dividends on stock and securities, . . . . .                                | 2,300 | 3  | 0  |
| Payments for boarders, . . . . .                                            | 317   | 12 | 8  |
| Receipts from other sources, . . . . .                                      | 2,328 | 11 | 8  |
|                                                                             | 6     | 4  | 8  |
| Total, . . . . .                                                            | 5,212 | 13 | 0  |

It will be seen, therefore, that the Governors are in receipt of an income from the rents and dividends of £2,877, while they received for paying patients within the year £2,328; and as the number of paying patients for the year ending 31st December, 1856 was eighty-three, the average amount received for each would be £28.

the founder.

The hospital was originally founded by Dean Swift, for the reception of as many idiots and lunatics as the annual income of the property bequeathed would be sufficient to maintain, and in the absence of any direction to the contrary on the part of the donors, it may be considered that the bequests subsequently left were to be appropriated in the same manner as the endowment given by the Dean.

From the terms of the Dean's will there can be no doubt that no payment was contemplated on the part of the patients. From an examination, however, of the books of the hospital we find that boarders must have been admitted at an early period after the opening of the hospital, in order, by a profit thereon, to enable the Governors to receive a greater number of poor persons. In 1799 it was ordered that no boarders be admitted under forty guineas. It was subsequently found (1819) that the hospital lost by receiving patients at this rate, and it was directed to be raised. The records, however, show that chamber patients had been received, paying eighty guineas; and in 1830 the Board resolved to admit twenty patients at thirty guineas. In the following year we find that it was considered more free patients might be maintained. No rule, however, appears to have been adopted for their admission in greater numbers than before. In 1843, the attention of Lord St. Leonards, then Chancellor, and a Governor of the institution, appears to have been attracted to the manner in which the endowment was applied, and he expressed great doubts as to whether payment should be received for any patient. Subsequently, in accordance, it is stated, with his opinion, that no profit at least should be made on the patients, a minute was adopted ordering that all patients at above £40 per annum were to be discontinued, the number of those at that and lesser sums to be fixed on a future day. No further order appears, however, to have been made on this point until 1853, when it was decided that in the then state of the funds the free patients were not to exceed seventy-five, the total number accommodated in the hospital being 150. The free patients were therefore fixed at one-half.

with.

The following statement, compiled from the books of the hospital, will show the number of free and paying patients accommodated at different periods:—

|                      | Free. | Paying. |
|----------------------|-------|---------|
| In 1800, — 106, — 52 |       |         |
| " 1808, — 86, — 51   |       |         |
| " 1815, — 100, — 50  |       |         |
| " 1843, — 94, — 61   |       |         |
| " 1850, — 71, — 70   |       |         |
| " 1857, — 66, — 83   |       |         |

We cannot consider this as indicating a satisfactory application of the endowment. It is true that the average payment by boarders is somewhat less than their actual cost in ordinary years, and so far they may be considered as maintained in part by the charity; but if the diminution of free patients and the increase of paying patients are to continue, it may one day result that no inmates of Dean Swift's Hospital will be maintained entirely out of his bequest, which certainly does not appear to have been in the contemplation of the founder.

It appears by the evidence that the reception of paying patients has been so profitable, that the Governors have been enabled to accumulate the sum of £20,000 thereby, the interest of which is available for the support of the institution. We cannot but think that the objects of the endowment would have been more properly carried out, if the income had been entirely appropriated to the maintenance of free patients. It is true that the law now provides for poor lunatics of the humbler classes in the district asylums; but there are many cases of poverty which exist in the better classes, and for which the asylum provided by Dean Swift would be, and, to a great extent, is, a beneficent refuge. We are of opinion that, so far as the funds of the endowment admit, they should be fully applied to the maintenance of free patients, and that the number be fixed annually; the surplus accommodation should then be made available for cases paying the full cost of their maintenance, together with a charge calculated to cover the patient's proportion of repairs, &c., in the building; all other cases should be left to seek admission into the district or private asylums. If further accommodation were required, the erection of the requisite buildings should await the exercise of that benevolence which Dean Swift naturally expected his munificence would encourage; and we are not without hope that, if it were generally known that the funds of St. Patrick's Hospital could only be applied to the maintenance of patients, the money required for additional buildings would be speedily furnished by the generosity of the public. However that may be, we must repeat the opinion we have expressed, that the present application of the funds of the hospital does not appear satisfactory.

<sup>a</sup> The present annual income does not fully exhibit the extent of donations made to the Governors, for a note to the return (Appendix) states that benefactions and legacies had been applied to the building of the hospital, on which a sum exceeding £22,000 was known to have been expended. On the other hand, Parliamentary grants have been made to the hospital, between 1755 and 1812, amounting to £34,194.

sioners as to govern-
spection, &c.

The constitution of the Board of Governors of St. Patrick's Hospital might, with advantage, be altered, and such anomalies as two governorships being centred in one person, viz., the Dean of Christ Church and St. Patrick's, corrected. We think, moreover, that the governors should, with the exception of those ex-officio, be selected, in some degree, from the medical profession, and that non-attendance, for one year, of any save an ex-officio governor, should vacate his appointment.

The hospital should be under the inspection and control of the Board of Commissioners we have recommended, in every thing except the management of the property, and the rules made by the governors, for the regulation of the institution, should be subject to their approval.

We think that chaplains should also be appointed to this hospital, and that the present unsatisfactory arrangement, by which the Secretary, who is a clergyman of the Established Church, acts as chaplain for his salary in the former office, and the absence of all provision within the establishment for the discharge of chaplains' duties by clergymen of other persuasions, should be corrected.

We are also of opinion that the master of the Hospital should be a member of the medical profession.

The attendance of governors, considering that they are all resident in or near the city of Dublin, is not numerous, and on frequent occasions the required quorum of three has not assembled. This has led to the irregular transaction of business, by one or two members. The better course would be that the usual monthly meeting should, in such cases, be adjourned to the ensuing week, due notice being given to the governors, informing them, at the same time, of the cause of this postponement.

We think it desirable also that in this, as in all other institutions of the same character, a visiting committee, or visitors in rotation, should be appointed, whose duty it would be, between the monthly meetings, to visit and inspect the hospital and its inmates, and report to the Board. From the evidence of the Master it would appear that there was formerly such a committee, but that "latterly it had not assembled."

We cannot but think that, if the attention of the highly respectable body which is charged with the government of the hospital had been thus called more directly to the condition of the institution, we should not be obliged to state, as we feel ourselves compelled to do, that St. Patrick's Hospital, though possessing an ample endowment, with an accumulated fund in bank of £20,000, and situated in the metropolis is yet, in many respects, one of the most defective institutions for the treatment of the insane which we have visited. There are no padded rooms for violent patients, only one fixed bath for 150 patients of both sexes—which had been out of order for two or three months previous to the time of our visit, and unfit for use, and two slipper-baths, neither of which had been in use for a long time—rooms had been appropriated for lavatories, but they are not used, and the patients wash in tubs in the day-rooms, the water having to be carried all through the house, as no supply is laid on; the hospital is not lighted with gas, "for fear of explosion;" and passages nearly 400 feet long have, on winter evenings, no other light than that which is afforded by three or four small candles. "An apparatus for heating the house was pulled down by order of the Board," not having been found to answer, and at present the hospital cannot be sufficiently warm in the winter months. The ventilation is stated to be better than in former years since the windows have been altered, but it must still be far from satisfactory, as the arrangements do not admit of its being effective.

On the whole, the condition of this hospital satisfied us that it is absolutely necessary it should be placed under the control of the Central Board, which may be established for the direction of lunatic asylums in Ireland, and that it should be subject to the visits of the Commissioners as frequently as the district asylums. It is, no doubt, a private endowment, but in former times received large aid (£24,194) from the state; and what, in the interest of the public, we have suggested, should be done for its better government, will be in furtherance of the benevolent intentions of the founder.

This hospital, from its proximity to one of the principal medical schools of the metropolis, might be made most usefully available in affording clinical instruction in the treatment of insanity. We have adverted to this in a previous part of our Report.

Bloomfield Retreat.

The Bloomfield Retreat is a small asylum in the vicinity of Dublin, maintained by the Society of Friends, and under the direction of a committee of that body. Not being kept for profit by any private individual, it is not considered subject to all the provisions of the 5 and 6 Vict., c. 123, and is not therefore licensed under that Act. While, however, claiming this exemption, the managing committee have been at all times most ready to admit the Inspectors, and have afforded them the fullest opportunity of examining the institution and the inmates, as well as the manner in which it is conducted.

On the occasion of our visit we found the Retreat in a clean and orderly condition; the rooms cheerful, and the patients apparently most carefully attended to. At times patients are admitted, for whom a large payment is received, members of the Society of Friends having, in all cases, a preference of admission, and at a lower rate than others.

It is not from any feeling that the Bloomfield Retreat requires more careful supervision, for it appears to us one of the best conducted private establishments in Ireland, but because we think that all institutions for the reception of the insane should be officially inspected by public officers that we recommend the law to be so far extended as to bring this establishment under the operation of whatever act may be passed in reference to private asylums. The same observation applies to St. Vincent's Asylum, which has been recently opened.

CHANCERY LUNATICS.

Chancery
Lunatics.

Right of the
regards.

The prerogative of the crown, usually delegated by special warrant to the Lord Chancellor, is the foundation of the authority exercised by him in the matter of lunatics. The guardianship by the Crown over persons incapable of taking care of themselves, was confirmed by early statutes, and has subsequently been regulated by various enactments. "The right of the crown to control and manage lunatics and their estates," as stated by an eminent writer, "commences with the finding of the office, or inquiry of lunacy." Hence it is that practically the parental duty of the Crown in this respect is confined to those cases where there has been the finding of a commission, which commission is only sped on the petition of some third party—never originating with the Lord Chancellor of his own motion.

Commissions
Inquirendo;

Generally it may be said, that it is with reference to the proper custody and care of the property, rather than the person of the lunatic, that the powers of the Lord Chancellor, acting for the Crown, are called into operation. And as a certain expense attends the proceeding, commissions are not usually issued where the income is less than £50 a-year. The proceedings consequent on the issue of the commission, are detailed in the evidence, and the cost thereof, when unopposed, and where the inquiry is held in Dublin, appears to be about £50. An investigation in the country, or where there is opposition, is necessarily attended with further expense.

It appears that the present practice is to employ the same Commissioners on all occasions, and Mr. Henn and Mr. Brady have given us the fullest information as regards these proceedings, during the time they have held that appointment. It is stated that for a time the practice existed, in country cases, of issuing the commission to two justices and a harrister, residing in the locality, to inquire into cases of alleged lunacy, but, not having been found to work well, it has been discontinued.

Considered
tory.

It appears to us that the present mode of inquiry is not satisfactory. The juries are spoken of as not being generally the most competent parties to judge of the sanity or insanity of the person brought before them. We fully concur in that view, and consider that such a question would be much better determined by persons experienced in the observation of lunatics, and whose familiarity with cases of diseased mind affords them greater facilities for detecting whether the mental faculties are so far impaired as to render the person before them incapable of managing his own affairs.

special cases.

Juries, we think, should only be resorted to, in special cases, where it is considered desirable by the Commissioners, or is demanded by the alleged lunatic, or where he is not within the jurisdiction of the Court.

The return having been made on the finding of the jury, the next proceeding is to appoint a committee to have charge of the person, and also a committee to have charge of the property of the lunatic. These two offices are frequently held by the same person, who is accountable to the Lord Chancellor in both capacities.

The location of the lunatic and the sum to be assigned for his maintenance are then fixed; and, at times, annual allowances are also made to the next of kin, out of the estate.

As regards the lunatic's person, a medical statement of his mental and bodily condition is required, annually, to be produced before the Lord Chancellor, but the selection of the person to draw up the statement is left to the Committee, who may be the party most interested in concealing neglect or mismanagement, and, with that exception, no inquiry or inspection is made for the information of the Court, unless the Chancellor has reason to believe, either from public or private representations, that it is desirable. It may be, and the case has been brought under our notice, that the lunatic is farmed out for an annual payment far below the sum allowed for his maintenance, and that even this is so irregularly paid as to be sometimes largely in arrear. The consequence is that, while the proprietor of the asylum is, on the one hand, reluctant to complain, lest such a proceeding should lead to the patient being withdrawn from his establishment, on the other hand, he naturally regards every additional expenditure on the lunatic as so much more risked, at any rate advanced without remuneration. It is true that, if the lunatic is in a licensed private asylum, his case comes under the cognizance of the Inspectors; but if he is domiciled in a house where no second lunatic is received, he has not that protection.

As regards the property of the lunatic, the committee is obliged to account regularly in Chancery for the income received, and all lettings must be approved by the court, and leases granted by its direction in cases where by special statute such power is given.

The alterations in the law which we would suggest, in reference to the lunatics under the Lord Chancellor's jurisdiction, are as follow:—We propose that in all cases the proceedings should originate, as at present, in a petition to the Lord Chancellor; but we think that the Commission de Lunatic Inquirendo should issue to the Central Board of Commissioners, whose appointment was recommended in the former part of this Report, or to any two of them, and that they should have power to sit in any part of the country as occasion might require. They should hold their inquiry without the intervention of a jury, except in the special cases above adverted to. They should make a return to the Lord Chancellor in the same manner as the Commissioners have hitherto done, which finding should be liable to traverse. If the return be unopposed, or the traverse fail, the lunatic should thenceforward be placed, as regards matters connected with his person, under the guardianship of the Central Board.

The Commissioners should appoint the committee of his person, fix the place of his residence, and, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor, the allowance for his maintenance. The committee should account to them for this allowance, and it should only be paid by the committee of the estate on the certificate of the Board. The Commissioners should also have the power to remove the committee of the person, and appoint another. Every Chancery lunatic should be visited by one, or more, of the Commissioners, when they think fit, and once, at least, in each year.

We do not consider it advisable, as suggested to us in evidence, that the Central Board should be charged with the guardianship of the lunatic's property, and we think that it may be left to the Chancellor, as at present, to appoint the committee of the estate, who shall be liable to account before the Master.

We think, however, that the powers of the Court of Chancery may be beneficially extended in some respects as regards the management of the estate. It appears unreasonable that the tenants of an estate should, because of the lunacy of the proprietor, be debarred the benefits of acquiring a suitable tenure of their farms; and we should, therefore, recommend that the Lord Chancellor should be empowered to authorize such leases as the lunatic might have granted if he had continued sane, but that in no case should this power extend to granting a lease for a longer period than thirty-one years, or three lives, and then only for the fair letting value, and without fine.

Under the plan which we have proposed we still contemplate the costs of speeding the Commission being paid out of the estate, but we should limit them, as far as the Central Board is concerned, to the actual expenses incurred.

There remains now to be considered, in connexion with this subject, that class of lunatics who, of humbler means and position, are unable to defray the cost of a Commission de Lunatico, but whose small, though to them not insignificant, property, is liable to be wasted to the injury of their family and children.

We think that in cases where the annual income or net amount of the property is small, the Commissioners, on application in writing, certified by two justices, and accompanied by a medical report, showing the presumed insanity of the party, should be empowered to hold an inquiry into the state of mind of the person represented as being insane, and that, should they certify to the insanity of the party, a copy of such certificate shall be lodged with the Clerk of the Peace of the county where the property is situated, and forwarded to the applicant, as well as to the next of kin of the lunatic.

The Assistant Barrister, on production of such certificate, and on application, should make such order relative to the possession and use of the lunatic's property, during his lunacy, as he may think fit, and should order the payment thereout annually of such sum as the Commissioners might allow as proper for the lunatic's maintenance.

The Commissioners should be authorized to make such order as, from time to time, may seem requisite for the visitation of such lunatics, and they should also have power themselves to visit such lunatics, and one or other of the Commissioners should visit each such lunatic once at the least in each year.

LUNATICS OTHERWISE LOCATED.

OTHERWISE
tients.

The last portion of our inquiry has reference to other lunatics, generally, and not located in any of the establishments to which we have referred.

As respects single patients received for profit, in Unlicensed Houses, we are of opinion that full provision should be made for their visitation, by the Commissioners, and for their periodical medical attendance, in cases where they are not residing under the charge of professional men. In addition to the notices of reception, &c., similar to those relative to patients in Licensed Houses, the Commissioners should be apprized, from time to time, of any change of residence.

tics of.

At the commencement of this report we referred to the returns of the Insane at Large, as stated in the last Report of the Inspectors of Lunatics. They have set down the whole number of insane "at large" as 5,441, and have estimated that, of this number, 600 are not paupers—leaving 4,841 of the latter class. As, however, the Returns made for our information by the constabulary and metropolitan police only included "lunatic poor," and showed but 3,352 of that class, we are inclined to think that the number of the insane, not paupers, at large, has been under-estimated by the Inspectors. In reference to the probable amount of additional accommodation that will be required for the lunatic poor, the numbers of that class at large is an important consideration; but in reviewing the "state of the law" as regards lunatics not confined in any public, private, or charitable asylum, their exact number, or the relative proportion of the rich and poor lunatics at large, is unimportant.

Condition of.

The returns to which we have alluded give a fair idea of the condition of the poor lunatics who are at large in Ireland. They may be thus classified:—

| Insane. | Males. | WellTreated. | No.Neglected. | Dis-posed. | Travellingmen. | Strangers. | Residentwithrelatives. | Residentwithotherpersons. | LivingAlone. | Vagrant. |
| 491     | 2,461  | 1,767            | 1,585             | 62             | 251                | 3,099      | 2,371                          | 356                                   | 80               | 565      |
| 3,352   |        | 3,352            |                   | 3,352          |                    | 3,352      |                                |                                       |                  |          |

In distributing the above total, we have classed as "neglected" not only those who have been returned as such, but those also who were stated to be very poor or wandering.

It will be seen from this statement that the vast majority of these cases are idiotic; that ten-elevenths of the whole are considered harmless, and that more than two-thirds are resident with relatives. There are, however, 565 vagrants who, with the 80 now living alone, ought clearly to be sent to asylums; and we cannot but think that similar humane enactments to those which are found in the English law, in reference to lunatics ill-treated or neglected, should be extended to Ireland on behalf of the whole 1,585 reported to be neglected.

We propose, therefore, that the Irish law should be assimilated to the 16 & 17 Vic., cap. 97, sec. 68, with respect to these cases. The constabulary and police should have power to arrest and bring before a magistrate every person wandering at large

protection

and deemed to be a lunatic; and every Justice of the Peace should have power, on sworn information, to cause such a person to be brought before him—further, every constable and relieving officer having a knowledge thereof should be required to give information, on oath, before a magistrate (within a limited period of his having acquired such a knowledge) of the case of any person, though not wandering at large, who is deemed to be a lunatic and is not under proper care and control, or is cruelly treated or neglected by any relative or person having the care or charge of him; and thereupon the magistrate shall himself visit, or cause to be brought before him, the alleged lunatic, and, if he think fit, shall call upon any legally qualified physician, surgeon, or apothecary, to visit or examine him; and if satisfied, from the report of such medical practitioner, in writing, and his own personal observation, that the person is a wandering lunatic, or though not wandering is a lunatic and not under proper care or control, or is cruelly treated or neglected by those who have care or charge of him, it shall be lawful for the magistrate to direct his removal to the lunatic asylum of the district. Copies of all the informations and the report of the medical officer, as well as a statement of the facts observed by the magistrates, should be forwarded with the lunatic to the asylum.

Proper provision should be made for the expenses of the examination, including the professional remuneration of the medical man called in.

With such provisions it appears to us the law will have done all that is requisite for the care and treatment of those lunatics at large whose condition may seem to call for its interposition.

In regard to those lunatics whose cases have not been provided for in the foregoing recommendations, and who, whether in poor or affluent circumstances, may be well treated at home, it cannot be expected, nor would it be reasonable, that there should be any interference by public officers. It may be that their mental condition would be improved, possibly their reason restored, if removed at an early period from the scenes and society in which their aberration of mind first exhibited itself; but, as long as they are not ill-treated or neglected, there does not appear to us any sufficient ground for the interposition of official inspection, which would be an intrusion on domestic privacy, and an unveiling of secret afflictions, would give pain without any corresponding benefit or advantage, and be as offensive to the feelings of the family as uncalled for and unnecessary.

All of which we beg humbly to submit for your Majesty's gracious consideration.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

Having completed the Inquiry intrusted to us by your Majesty, we desire to record the strong sense we entertain of the services rendered by our Secretary, M. J. Barry, Esq., whose entire time has been devoted to the duties of his office since the opening of the Commission.

Throughout our investigation his labours have been most zealous, and it is owing to his assiduous attention in personally working out the statistical information which we received, and the extent of which is not to be judged by what appears in our Appendix, that we were enabled to conduct the business of the Commission with the aid of a staff never exceeding two, and, for the greater part of the time, one assistant.

* In the Asylums thus marked (*), the Infirmarys are detached from the main building.

† No Infirmary exists in the Asylum marked (†), but in Mullingar Asylum parts of the wings of the building are appropriated to the sick.

‡ In this Asylum the sick are treated in their rooms. Defective structural arrangements and bad coverings prevent the use of the Infirmary.

* Thinks it rare to find in spade cultivation as even at present is worked at; but there is a field of four acres and a-half, nearly, now dug, in which it is intended to plant potatoes, sowing the drills by the plough.

† Of this eight acres, six acres are now sown with wheat and grass seeds; the remainder with grass seeds.

Beside the above officers, there are seven male attendants and five female attendants, a hall-porter, gate-porter, stoker, greaser, boiler, and a female assistant dressmaker, cook, laundress, and housemaid.

No. 12.—ARRANGEMENTS for EXERCISE, RECREATION, &c., CENTRAL ASYLUM.

* By referring to page fourteen of the general rules and regulations herewith sent, the Compendious will find the hours for rising and retiring to bed for the patients, as well as the hours for breakfast, dinner and supper. The only change in these matters is, that breakfast and supper are half an hour earlier than the time set down.

* As to exercise, there are usually about fifty of the males occupied out of a total of eighty-three. Twenty-six of the fifty go garden or farm work; about seven at tailoring, as shoemaking, &c.; six in general cleaning the house, sometimes more; the residue, eleven hundred, are employed on the great water pump, on the fuel-tank pump, or as the kitchen-yard pump, &c. This pump work may average each day four hours' duration. I consider that all these men have exercise enough for the week days. The tradesmen are in the workshops, from nine, a.m., till four, p.m., except the dinner time of the attendants, and their own dinner hour; according to the season, these people get on or two hours for recreation, before evening meal. Of the remaining thirty-three, scarcely any thing useful can be made of them, for the most part they are in the great yard, whilst the pumping is carried on, say that can be indeed may take a share in the work; but from six to ten usually, from sickness, delirium, or unmanageableness, are left in their rooms or divisions.

* On Sundays and holidays, after Divine service, the men in general go out on the pleasure ground, with attendants, until dinner hour; and again after dinner, until five o'clock in summer, or until dusk in winter.

* The amusements are not many; we have had draught and cards within doors; bowling, cricket, foot-ball, hand-ball outside; these please for a time, and are thrown aside. Our population are almost all of the brawler class, very many do not read or write, and so far as I have tried, little encouragement has been given me to get up a library. Two weekly papers are in general sent round among the people, Chambers' Edinburgh Journal, some of the National Education books; there are often ill-used and torn. One drawback to the reading class is the want of a separate room, properly lighted, where readers alone should be admitted, for the day-rooms are too noisy and unsuited for reading. As regards Testaments and prayer books, I have from time to time distributed them through the divisions to such as wished them, and lent some of my own books to proper persons, who asked for them.

* Of the women, in number forty-four, nine in general are in the laundry; eleven at needlework or knitting stockings; six in cleaning their divisions; four in miscellaneous matters, assisting the cook, &c.; fourteen are confined to bed, or are incompetent. These people have the two shag yards open to them, such as can make use of them, others, especially the laundry people, have one or two hours walking in the pleasure grounds, when their work is done, towards evening.

* As to amusements, about every second month, we have had music and dancing, a kind of fife, on which countless males and females have been brought into a large day-room, here got tea, and half a pint of beer, and appeared to have been made, so far, happy; these parties end at half-past ten o'clock, p.m.

(Signed),

W. COMPTON, M.D.,
Governor.

* Post mortem examination disclosed thickening of the meninges and effusion in substance of brain.

† Quoted by the patient appearing through the iron rail of his bed-room window, which, along with the window-shutter, he had broken at foot slack in the morning. By post mortem examination the liver was found in a state of softening from previous disease, the lungs were also unhealthy. A Coroner's inquest was held: the verdict was accidental, and no blame was attached to any of the officers of the establishment.

No. 9.—STATEMENT No. 1.—Showing the Annual Income derived from the Bequest of Dean Swift to St. Patrick's Hospital from Land and from other sources.

This hospital was founded, by the late Doctor Jonathan Swift, for the reception of Elders and Lame. By his will, dated 24th May, 1745, he left the whole of his personal estate and effects (save some few legacies) to build and hospital, and to purchase lands or tenements, in fee simple, for its support. The Governors were authorized, by Charter, in the year 1746: and they commenced building the best part of the hospital and part of the cells, for the reception of patients, upon a lot of ground which they had taken a lease of, in fee farm, from the Trustees of Doctor Sturges' Hospital, at the rent of 100 per annum; and as directed by Testator's will, they purchased, from the year 1750 to 1764, the fee and tenements of the townlands of Saggart, in the County of Dublin, and from time to time, in fee simple to their hands, contained adjoining the hospital, and took several parcels of ground adjoining Saggart, which they added to the hospital—the whole of which ground now contains about 65 acres. The sums expended in building boundary walls, &c., amounts to upwards of £22,000. These purchases of the lands of Saggart, and the sums expended in building, were paid out of the assets of the late Dean Swift and by benefactions and pecuniary aid from charitable persons. Annual Rental of Saggart Estate—One year, to March, 1850,

N.B.—These lands are subject to quit rent and rent-charges (exclusive of Rector's fees, Poor rates, &c.), amounting to £25 St. 6d.

No. 10.—STATEMENT No. 2.—As to the Annual Income derived from the Bequests of other Parties, and giving the name of the Donor in each case.

The late Reverend Charles Worrall, by his will, in the year 1751, bequeathed to his Executors in Trust, for charitable purposes, his interest in certain leasehold lands, at Golden Bridge, near Kilmastown, County Dublin, held under the Petty Comers of Robert Parsons, at the head rent of 40 lbs. 6d., and which were assigned, by the Executors of said Charles Worrall, to the Governors and their successors for the use of the hospital. The annual rent, subject to and head rent, amounts to

The late Reverend John Gratton, by his will, dated in 1754, bequeathed to the Governors, for the use of the hospital, two Debentures, of fifty pounds each, late currency, chargeable on the Turnpike Road; the annual interest payable thereon amounted to 44 lbs. 4d. No interest has been paid thereon since the year 1821. By the Act 15 & 16 Vic., cap. 35, entitled "The Dublin and White Roads Turnpike Act," the Commissioners appointed under said Act assigned to the Governors the sum of 44 lbs. 4d. (being the one-twentieth part of the said Debentures) and assigned a mortgage to them for that amount, payable by the Grand Jury of County of Dublin.

The Reverend Doctor Thomas Swift, by his will, dated in 1756, bequeathed to the Governors, for the use of the hospital, two Debentures, of fifty pounds each, late currency, chargeable on the Turnpike Road leading from Dublin to Kilmagurk, County of Wexford, and, by the Act of Parliament before mentioned, a mortgage has been assigned to the Governors by the Commissioners for the sum of 44 lbs. 4d., payable by the Grand Jury of the County of Dublin, with interest, at three per cent. The annual interest amounts to,

2 10 45

By the will of the late James Symes, Esq., of Hammersmith, County of Middlesex, England, dated in 1765, this hospital is entitled to the surplus profits or profits of certain Townlands in the parishes of Farns and County of Wexford, thereby vested in Michaelmas Symes, Esq., and his heirs for ever, as Trustees, that, subject to the arrangement and payment of charges, as in and with directed, the profit rent should be paid over and applied for the better support of this hospital, and which was paid, on an average, per annum,

500 0 0

By the will of the late Reverend John Taylor, of Ashburn, in the County of Dorset, England, dated in 1768, he bequeathed to the Governors and their successors, for the use of this hospital, his leasehold interest, situate in Farnborough, Hants, and their successors, for the use of this hospital, his leasehold interest, situate in Ashburn School, subject to all rents wherever the same is charged, and which produce an annual rental of,

Head rent and quit rent amount to £111 St. (exclusive of Rector's fees, Poor rates, &c.)

* It is probable that the cost of building the Hospital was considerably more than the amount named; but any additional sum that may have been expended cannot be stated with accuracy, as the accounts from the year 1757 to 1759 are not forthcoming.

* Although the license given to Dr. Daffy by the Legislature has not been revoked on any occasion, the Institution was never visited with a view to the suspension of its license if they knew of any system which would revive the patients in it, who, it must be acknowledged, Jameson's House was not opened for the purpose of a Private Licensed Asylum 20 January, 1854, and is composed of a few idiot and imbeciles.—There is another private asylum, namely, Howells' Retreat, Donnybrook-road, capable of accommodating 20 patients, belonging to accommodation for 140 patients, for the same reason, is also an unlicensed establishment.

MEMORANDUM as to RETURN No. 1.

By a subsequent Return (dated January 7, 1858), furnished to the Commissioners by Drs. Nugent and Hatchell, Inspectors of Lunatics, it appeared that, in addition to the necessary removal of license, the following changes had taken place in the private asylums, from the date of the foregoing:—

1. The license of William Steamer Stanley had been transferred to Greahamstown House, Rathfrilandham.
2. Frances Dickinson had been substituted, as superintendent of Midland Retreat, Annestree, for Mary Roberts.
3. The numbers for which the following licenses were issued had been changed, as follows:—

Note.—This list does not include some cases where hepatitis was irregularly recorded as dangerous and subsequently discharged by the local authorities, as at Gillingham Prison, Telford, etc. In the former, for example, five persons were confined for a short period, a week or ten days, when they were set free, not exhibiting any symptoms of jaundice, at the de Cade. The preceding remark is made to clarify any apparent discrepancy between the returns from jails and those from the London Asylum Office.

Residence, _____

The form and affidavit are to be filled up and transmitted to the manager previously to the hearing being sent to the institution; and no lunatic will be received until it shall be notified to some of — friends that there is a vacancy for — reception, unless in urgent cases.

No application will be attended to which does not state the name, residence and occupation, and degree of relationship of the two next male relatives, and the next female relative of the patient (when such exist), according to the following form:—

| Name. | Residence. | Occupation. | Degree ofEducationality. |

No. 2.—FORM OF RECOMMENDATION TO THE SENIOR DISTRICT LUNATIC ASYLUM.

Name — Residence — Date of Admission —
No. in General Registry —
No. in Physician's Registry —

INSTRUCTIONS TO BE PARTICULARLY ATTENDED TO.

Let Patients cannot be received unless the Admission Forms are accurately completed with, and returned to the Asylum, for the approval of the Board of Governors, previous to the — in each month; and it is especially to be observed, that no Lunatic shall be transmitted to the Institution without due notification from the Resident Physician of a vacancy.

2nd. The Governors require, that the party who signs the engagement of removal, shall be a gentleman residing in the neighbourhood of the patient, or a person of well-known respectability, whose address should be fully given.

3rd. As many unfit cases have, from time to time, been sent to Lunatic Asylums, particularly persons far advanced in life, whose mental malady partook rather of the character of imbecility than of actual insanity, and the chronic nature of which gave no hope of cure, the Governors, in order to prevent, as far as possible, the admission of such cases, which prove a permanent burthen on the establishment, to the exclusion of those that are acute, and which may be benefited by treatment, request that all medical gentlemen certifying to the insanity of applicants, will be most particular in their examination, as to the probable curability or dangerous character of the disease.

4th. The affidavit should be made, when practicable, by the next of kin.

5th. Physicians, with the assistance of the Medical Attendant or Certifying Practitioner, are requested to annex, according to the best of their knowledge, precise answers to the following medical queries.

6th. The friends of patients unable to pay the sum required in private asylums, and who are able and willing to pay what would be necessary for their support in the District Asylum, and whom it would appear unfair to the public to admit gratuitously, may have them admitted when those two conditions, under the proviso of their being withdrawn in case the poor they occupy should be required for poor patients. In such instances, these portions of the Affidavit and Certificate, &c., on whose part application is made, is not forth, "as a poor person, or without a friend to support him or her," or "as a pauper," must, of course, be omitted.

7th. All letters, and other communications, on the business of the Institution, to be addressed, free of postage, to the Resident Physician, at the Asylum, who will afford every information that may be required.

The friends of patients are admitted to see them on Tuesdays and Saturdays, between the hours of 10 o'clock, A.M. and 1 o'clock, P.M., in summer; and 11 o'clock, A.M. and 3 o'clock, P.M., in winter, under the control and direction of the Resident Physician.

The form when filled up, to be returned to the Manager for approval, previous to the person being sent.

The foregoing forms of admission will serve to show the great desirability of these forms in the several asylums, as noticed in the Report, p. 13. The following peculiarities are presented in the forms used in other asylums.

In the Armagh Asylum the medical certificate states that "there is danger in allowing" the person whose admission is applied for "to be at liberty."

In the Ballinacorney Asylum the affidavit states that the person applied for "is not subject to epilepsy, nor born an idiot;" and the medical certificate adds forth that in the opinion of the signer "the case is not incurable."

In the Belfast forms the medical certificate states that in the opinion of the party signing "there is danger in allowing the lunatic to be at liberty;" and the Magistrate or Churchwarden's certificate is to the same effect.

The Carlow medical and magisterial certificate are of a like kind, and the former states that the lunatic is considered "curable" by the person signing it.

The Clonmel affidavit declares that the person applied to be admitted "has not been born an idiot."

In Kilkenny a Governor, or local clergyman, certifies that the party is a "dangerous lunatic," in his opinion.

In Kilkenny the physician certifies his opinion that "there is danger in allowing the party to be at liberty," and that he thinks the case is "curable."

In Limerick and in Londonderry the affidavit states that the party "is not subject to epilepsy nor born an idiot."

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

DUBLIN, 24th OCTOBER, 1856.

Present—Sir T. N. REMINGTON, Chairman; Dr. ANDREWS, Mr. LETWICKE, Mr. WILKES, Dr. CORRIGAN, and Mr. BARRY, Secretary.

DUBLIN.

COMMISSIONERS for GENERAL CONTROL and CORRESPONDENCE.

John Rodolph, Esq., sworn and examined.

Commissioners for General Control and Correspondence.

1. I believe you are a Commissioner for General Control and Correspondence of Lunatic Asylums, under the 1st and 2nd Geo. IV. cap. 33?—Yes.

2. How long have you been a member of that Commission?—From the time of the abolition of the former unpaid Board.

3. It is stated in a return as 1835?—I believe so.

4. You are also a member of the Board of Public Works?—Yes.

5. Are you aware what the course of proceeding was by the Board to whom you succeeded?—When the Order of the Lord Lieutenant and Council for the erection of an asylum was issued, the architect was instructed to prepare the plans for a building to contain the limited number of patients. These plans were then considered by the Commissioners, and when approved by them the architect was instructed to call for tenders. It appeared also by the minutes that the Commissioners of Control reported on the extent of the district to be attached to each Asylum, and the number of patients it should be built for. This was all the information that could be obtained from the Minute Books of the former Commissioners as to the course of proceeding.

The former Board of General Control and Correspondence.

6. Were the books and minutes of the former Board handed over to your Board?—Yes, they were handed over to us.

7. Those books and minutes can be produced at present?—Yes.

8. Did the former Board of General Control and Correspondence exercise any control over the asylums when built?—I think not. They drew up the rules and regulations to be observed therein, in accordance with the Act of Parliament, which authorizes the Commissioners of General Control to do so. I believe the rules and regulations now in force were drawn up by the Board of Commissioners, of which Dr. Rennie was the chairman.

9. Has there been any variation in the practice, since the Board, of which you are a member, was formed, as regards the duties performed by the Commissioners?—We have performed the same duties only with reference to building and purchasing ground. We have never performed any duties connected with the management of the asylums.

10. Am I to understand that the course which has been pursued since you became a Commissioner, with reference to the erection of asylums, and the formation of districts, is that which you have described as having been pursued by your predecessors?—Yes. Our predecessors did all the duty, I believe, without the help of the Inspectors; but since we have been in office, the Inspectors have done all the other portion of the duty, and we have been confined to purchasing ground and erecting buildings, with the necessary fittings, &c.

11. Are you aware of the circumstances under which the Board you succeeded was abolished, and the Commissioners, of whom you are one, were first appointed?—I have always understood that it was on the application of the late Commissioners themselves; that having completed the routine of duties prescribed for them under the Act for erecting the new asylums, they then applied to be relieved from all further duty; and on that we were appointed a Commission.

12. When the former Commission ceased to exist, they had already divided Ireland into Lunatic Asylum districts, and erected an asylum in each of those districts?—They had, all but Cork.

Asylums erected by former Board.

13. The position of Cork was, I believe, peculiar, it was not included in any district?—Cork was not a district.

14. Has the county of Cork been subsequently declared a district by the Act of Parliament, the 8th and 9th Vic. chap. 107?—Yes.

15. I believe the Richmond Lunatic Asylum had also been declared a District Asylum by Act of Parliament, previously to your being appointed a Commissioner?—Yes.

16. State the names of the new asylums erected?—Cork, Kilkenny, Killarney, New Richmond, Sligo, Omagh, and Mullingar.

New Asylums.

Debate.

Commissioners for General Control and
Correspondence.

John Radcliffe, Esq.

Proceeding: communications with local authorities;
purchase of sites for Asylums.

17. In the Order in Council directing the formation of a new district, I believe the number for which the asylum is to be built is specified?—Yes.

18. Does it specify the amount to be expended in the erection of the asylum?—No.

19. After having received that Order in Council, what is the next step taken by the Commissioners?—On the receipt of the order, steps were taken to procure a site as near to the town named in the order as could be procured at a reasonable price.

20. Did any communication take place with the local authorities, either the Grand Jury or Magistrates, with reference to the purchase of the land or site?—No, except in one or two instances. In the case of Omagh, we communicated with the Grand Jury there. We pointed out two sites that we thought eligible, and requested them to select one of them. They appointed a committee, and did select the site on which the asylum is now built. With regard to the site for Cork, it was chosen by the Governors themselves, and approved of by Colonel Jones on the part of the Board of Correspondence.

21. Are you aware whether any communication took place between the local authorities and the Commissioners, or the Government, with reference to the formation of the districts?—I am not aware.

22. Can you state why the local authorities were consulted in the two instances you have named, and not in the others?—In the case of Omagh, as the selection of the site affected the future cost of maintaining the asylum, we requested the Grand Jury to give an opinion. Two sites had been selected, both suitable—one close on the turf district and some distance from the town; the other away from the turf district and close to the town, but more expensive than the other.

23. Were both sites equally eligible for the asylum?—I will say they were both good sites, but I do not think equally good.

24. Were the local authorities consulted as to the quantity of land to be taken?—That is settled on a principle. I am not quite certain that the Order in Council does not state the quantity. But we went upon what has been done in England and in Ireland, which was to allow ten acres for every 100 patients.

25. Did both the sites in the Omagh case contain the necessary quantity of land?—They contained the requisite quantity; thirty acres, I think. There is a return to Parliament stating the quantity.

26. Can you state the reasons why the selection of the site at Cork was left to the Governors?—I do not know. It originated with them. When the matter first came to us, there came a long list of sites about Cork, which had been viewed by them. I am not sure whether all were considered eligible. Some were. There was a preference given to the site on which we have now erected the asylum.

27. Generally speaking, have any local parties, either existing Governors, Grand Jurors, or Magistrates, any voice in the selection of the site?—No voice legally.

28. Have they practically been admitted to express an opinion on the subject?—No objection was made to any one offering an opinion.

29. Is any opportunity given to any of the various bodies I have mentioned, as a body, to express an opinion upon the subject previous to the site being purchased?—I will answer you this way. There has been no communication from our office to magistrates or others near the towns where such asylums were erected. I looked through the Minute Books of our predecessors, and I could not find that there had been any communication held with local authorities with respect to sites. The Commissioners followed the course pointed out by the Act. They were held responsible, and they exercised the power.

30. The site having been fixed upon, to whom was the question submitted for final approval?—The site was settled by the Board of Correspondence.

31. Did they proceed to purchase the land without submitting it to the approval of the Lord Lieutenant or any party?—I think in some cases there was a communication, but I am not at this moment prepared to answer you, with regard to some of the sites. Take Kilkenny, for example; there was a communication with the Inspectors of Asylums. Dr. Nugent, with me, chose that site. Dr. White was with me at Kilkenny choosing that site.

32. Having approved of the site and concluded the terms of purchase, what body has been asked to approve the amount of the purchase money?—The jury decided the amount of the purchase. We cannot tell what a site will cost until we have held our inquiry. We viewed it this way. We are ordered by the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council to erect an asylum to hold so many people, at such or such a town, and we make the best bargain we can for the site, by impanelling a jury to determine the amount.

33. But before the matter is considered by a jury, have you not taken into consideration whether it was one which would be likely to be expensive in the purchase or not?—In every case but that of Cork I inspected the sites near each town; and in deciding on the site to be purchased the Commissioners always were influenced by the probable cost.

34. Is any contract entered into for the purchase of land from the proprietor, previous to its being submitted to a jury for valuation?—I think that in some instances we agreed with parties as to terms, subject to their being confirmed by a jury. I may give a more detailed answer to this.

35. Having purchased the land, did you proceed to prepare plans for the building?—Having purchased the land, we then selected an architect, and he was desired to prepare plans. Printed instructions were given to the architect for their guidance as to the general arrangements of the building.

36. I believe the Order in Council stated the number of patients for whom the asylum was to be erected?—Yes.

Building Asylums;

Orders in Council.

57. Did the Order in Council limit the expenditure for such asylum?—Literally it did.

58. In what case?—In the case of the Richmond Asylum.

59. That was a case of additional buildings?—Additional buildings; there was a good deal of difference of opinion on the subject.

60. In what other cases was the amount limited?—I cannot tell now; I will look over the Orders in Council, and see. I do not think there is any limit except in cases of enlargement—in the case of Belfast we gave estimates, but in the new asylums, generally speaking, there was no estimate given to the Privy Council, for there was no occasion. The Act did not require us to go to the Lord Lieutenant and Council again to obtain any authority after the Order in Council was issued.

61. Were the plans submitted to the Lord Lieutenant in Council for approval?—No.

62. Or to the Lord Lieutenant?—No.

63. Were the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums consulted as to the plans?—In every case the plans were sent to them.

64. Were their objections, if any, considered?—They never made any, I think, except in one instance. When the plans were approved by the Commissioners themselves, they were sent to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, and their opinion was requested upon the proposed arrangements for the patients. We did not consult them upon the design; we considered that was our business; but as to the arrangements of the buildings which affected the comfort and convenience of the patients, they were particularly consulted. I am not aware of any instance in which a suggestion emanating from them, with regard to the building of an asylum, was not attended to.

65. In directing architects to prepare plans, did you state to them the sums you proposed to expend in the construction of that asylum?—No.

66. You left them free?—We had a great deal of communication with the architects, for they were constantly coming to us with their plans. We always gave them to understand, that they must keep down the expenditure as much as possible. As regards the arrangements, the first thing with us was the comfort and wants of the patients.

67. Were you, as a Board, governed by any calculation, besides that of the number of inmates, as to the expenditure that should be incurred?—At the beginning we had some idea of limiting the expense to so much per patient. We mentioned, I think, in conversation, about £100 or £120 per patient as the limit; but we found afterwards that it was impossible to fix any thing on the subject.

68. Can you produce the instructions that were given to the architects about to furnish plans?—Yes.

69. Were the instructions given to the architects generally complied with?—I think, generally speaking, they were, so far as such instructions can be.

70. Did the architect, in sending in his plans, furnish you with an estimate of the probable cost?—He did not. An estimate, in my opinion, and that of my colleagues, is of little value, unless made upon quantities taken out.

71. Did the Commissioners form any estimate of the probable cost of the building, before advertising for tenders?—No, except generally by inspecting the plans.

72. Did they take out the quantities previous to accepting the contracts, and make an estimate for themselves?—I will explain the course. We advertised for tenders upon plans and specifications, and the builders were invited to meet at our office on a certain day—all those that intended to put in tenders selected a person to act as their measurer, in conjunction with a person to be selected by us. Those two measurers met together, with the plans and specifications, to take out the quantities. These quantities were printed by us, and each party intending to tender got a copy to enable him to add his price for each item in the schedule, and to state the gross amount for which he would execute the work specified—to be subject to increase or reduction, regulated by the detailed prices, as the quantity of work contracted for might be varied by the Commissioners. On receipt of the tenders, (the lowest of which in nearly every instance was accepted,) if the cost of the buildings was very high, we re-considered the plans with a view to ascertain if any saving could be effected by reducing the quantity of ornamental or other work.

73. Can you furnish copies of the schedules to which you have referred in your last answer?—Yes.

74. In making alterations in the plans, with the view of cutting down the expenditure, did you limit yourself entirely to alterations in the exterior decorations, or was any alteration made in the interior accommodation for inmates?—I think in Cork we reduced the extent of accommodation, but in Cork only. I do not recollect that we did so in any other case.

75. How could you reduce the extent of accommodation below what was necessary for the number of inmates named in the Order in Council?—Not below the number of inmates. We cut off offices that were considered unnecessary. The architect had given rather too great a range of offices for the Cork Asylum.

76. Could you specify what offices were, on such occasions, struck out of the plans?—They were workshops and stores, and buildings of that kind.

77. Were any alterations made affecting the alterations for warming or ventilation of the building?—No. Do you speak with reference to Cork?

78. Any asylum?—In the Cork case there were rooms in the basement for a heating apparatus, which was never erected; that is not an alteration of the plan. The accommodation was given, but the apparatus was not put up; we afterwards did not think it necessary.

DETAILS.

Commissioners for General Control and
Correspondence,
John Haichoff, Esq.

59. Could you specify what offices were struck off generally?—I state the plans were to the Inspectors for approval. We did not alter these plans, as regards arrangements. The heating and ventilation did not appear in any way upon these plans, nor upon any plan entered into by contract, except the space allowed for putting in heating apparatus, as at Cork asylum; we did not put it in there.

60. Can you state in what way the reductions were made in the interior arrangements, which affected the accommodation of the patients?—The only instance I am aware of at this moment is Cork; and in that case we cut off a great deal of office arrangements at the rear of the building proposed by the architect, after the plans had been sent to the Board of Governors: we did not think it necessary to send the plans back to them.

Estimates for building.

61. Having received the tenders for the erection of the asylum, were you then in a position to form an estimate of the cost?—Of the building.

62. Did they include the furnishing?—They did not include furniture or fittings. The tenders included the buildings that we were aware at the time were necessary.

63. Should other buildings appear subsequently to be necessary, was the same course pursued with regard to them?—We then took the schedule. On reference to a schedule of prices, you would see the cost of every perch of work stated.

64. You continued the same contractor, allowing him to build the additional works, according to the schedule of prices?—Yes; or we cut off any work we did not consider necessary, and made the reduction of payment according to the schedule of prices.

Additional works:
Fittings and Furniture of Asylums.

65. How were the fittings and furniture provided?—by contract or otherwise?—The fittings, such as shelves, and all carpenter's work of that kind, were done by the contractor generally, according to his schedule of prices. He gives a detailed price in his schedule for every sort of work. The great object was to give all the work properly belonging to the building contractor to him.

66. How was the furniture selected and provided?—The furniture was supplied principally by people in the towns where the asylums are, upon tenders. The towns are generally small. Take Sligo for example. Two or three men, that were considered fit to make the ordinary furniture required, were called upon to give us estimates for each description. The cooking apparatus were almost invariably supplied from a particular house in England.

67. Were the Inspectors of Asylums ever communicated with or consulted as regards the fittings or the furniture?—I cannot answer that question now. They were aware from the first of the kind of furniture we were putting up, and the fittings in every asylum. They used to be constantly looking at them, and there was no remonstrance, except latterly, with regard to water-closets.

Medical men not
tings, &c.

68. Did you consult any medical men besides the Inspectors, with reference to the construction of the buildings, the fittings, or the furniture to be provided?—No; we sent round to some of the best asylums in the North of England, and also in Scotland, one of our Clerks of Works, to get us information on the different fittings required, and, when we got that information, we selected what we thought was the best. The fact is, that it is not a medical question. I may observe, that previous to the commencement of any of the new asylums, and with a view to obtain information as to the nature and extent of accommodation afforded in the lately erected English asylums, an inspection of many of them, including those of Surrey, Hanwell, and Maidstone, was made by me, accompanied by our architect, under the sanction of the Treasury, and every opportunity was taken of acquiring information as to the best description of houses for the insane.

No medical men on the present Board.

69. I believe there is no medical gentleman at present on the Board of Commissioners?—No; it would be very hard to say who the Board of Commissioners are.

70. Are you aware that the former Board of Commissioners when you succeeded, consisted one-half of medical men?—It did fully, I should think, and the other half of non-professional men.

Application for money to meet expenditure upon
Asylums.

71. How soon, after having ascertained the probable cost of an asylum, did you communicate it to the Lord Lieutenant and Council?—As it after the finishing?

72. No, after the plans had been approved, and the contracts taken?—When we wanted money.

73. When applying for the money?—We stated in some cases that we had entered into a contract for a certain sum.

74. That application was made to the Privy Council?—To the Lord Lieutenant and Council.

75. Was any communication made to any local bodies of the estimate then sent in?—No.

76. With regard to the issue of money by the Privy Council, did you apply for an issue of money for the purchase of land after you received the valuation of the jury?—Yes.

Mode of applying;

77. That was a distinct application?—Yes.

78. Did you, from time to time, pending the erection of the asylum, draw such sums as you required, through the Privy Council, on applications in the usual form?—We went through a form of memorial, applying to the Privy Council for an issue, on account of their Order in Council, to erect an asylum for so many patients.

mitted in.

79. Was that course followed in each case?—No; the applications through error went direct to the Treasury, instead of to the Privy Council. They always went to the Treasury, but from the Privy Council; we were called upon to alter our system of obtaining money from the Treasury, upon all our works. We sent a monthly estimate of what we would require; and owing to the absence in America, upon an unpleasant duty, of the Clerk, who had charge of the proper forms and accounts, the head accountant, instead of sending to the Privy Council, and asking for an issue, sent in an estimate to the Treasury for the amount required in the ensuing month, and so passed by the Privy Council unintentionally. That continued for some time, and it gave rise to the Commission that latterly took place.

80. Was any objection ever made, by the Lord Lieutenant in Council, to the estimates which you sent in of the probable cost of the asylums?—Not that I am aware of.

81. Did the sum which you applied for, either to the Privy Council or Treasury, on account of the erection of any asylum, exceed the estimate which you had originally furnished to the Privy Council?—I do not think so. The few estimates that we furnished to the Privy Council, as I mentioned before, have been for enlarging existing asylums, not for the erection of new ones, except the Richmond Dublin Asylum, and I do not think we have exceeded the estimate in that case.

82. My question had reference to the statement you made to the Privy Council, when asking the first issue on account of the erection of an asylum?—That was not an estimate—it was a contract.

83. Did the sum which you eventually drew through the Privy Council, for the erection of any asylum, exceed the contract price which you had originally stated to the Privy Council as that for which the building was to be erected?—In every case we exceeded them greatly; but then it has reference to the whole cost of the building, and not the particular building we contracted for. We entered into a contract with A or B, according to the plans and specifications, and that is what is mentioned to the Privy Council; but that is only a portion of the cost. There is the cost of the fittings and furniture, and the laying out of the grounds. All that, which is done by separate parties, in many cases, is to be added.

84. In applying for issues from the Privy Council, beyond the sums which you originally stated when applying for the first issue on account of the erection of an asylum, did you ever furnish them with a separate statement of the sum you would require?—I cannot answer that—I can only say I do not think we did, but I will ascertain that point. As I understand your question, it is that when we applied to the Privy Council for an issue, were we in the habit of stating the probable cost of the building? Then, when we wanted money to pay for fittings, were we in the habit of stating the cost of the fittings?

85. Has more money been paid to the contractors, in any case, than the sum for which they contracted?—Yes; for extra work, that was not originally specified.

86. For the actual work stated in the original tenders, was more money paid than the amount of the contract?—There was a certain quantity of work specified to be done for a certain sum. The contractor was not paid extra for that. He was paid extra for additional work required to be done.

87. Has the same course been pursued in the cases of additional buildings, and of enlargements, as was pursued in the case of the erection of the original buildings?—As regards the Privy Council and ourselves, yes.

88. Have you given estimates in all cases of additional buildings, and in all cases of the enlargement of buildings?—Generally speaking, where there is an enlargement of buildings, or alterations, the amount has been stated beforehand.

89. Have the Governors or any other local authority any voice as to the propriety or otherwise of erecting additional buildings, or of enlarging asylums?—I cannot answer you of my own knowledge, but I believe in every instance it has originated with them. It is settled through the Inspector. The Inspector communicates upon the subject with the Lord Lieutenant; a communication is then made to our department, and a report required for the information of the Lord Lieutenant and Council.

90. Is there an Order in Council, in the case of an additional building, similar to that for an original building, fixing the number of patients for whom it is to be erected?—I think so. I think the exact number to be accommodated in the asylum is specified in addition to those already there.

91. Is the same course pursued with regard to enlargements?—Precisely.

92. Is there any communication made to the Governors, in case of an addition to an asylum, or an enlargement, as to the cost of such works?—Not from us. At present we are adding to the Belfast Asylum; and all the applications came from the Governors to the Lord Lieutenant, to order us to do such and such additional works; and we have been doing them in that way instead of their originating with us.

93. Do you ever erect, or cause to be erected, any works in an asylum which are not ordered by the Lord Lieutenant and Council?—I think there has never been any work done in any asylum by us, that has not come under a general Order in Council. The order to build an asylum for a certain number of patients, that embraces a great deal.

94. Have you ever constructed any works in asylums for which the money has been paid by the Governors out of their annual expenditure?—I think not. The only thing of the kind I am aware of was lately. There was a legacy of £100 left to the Richmond Asylum, and they wanted us to add more to it. There was a reference down from the Castle. I hardly remember the particulars sufficiently well; but I heard of the Lord Lieutenant in Council making an order for an addition to the £100 in aid of some building or other.

95. The Commissioners do not keep the asylums in repair?—We do not keep them in repair. The Governors keep them in repair themselves.

96. What step is taken, after the erection and finishing of an asylum, to give it up to the Governors?—We certify to the Lord Lieutenant that the building is completed. That is the course as regards ourselves; but in some instances the Board of Governors have said, "We won't take the building up unless the Inspectors of Asylums certify it is complete." They made a law for themselves.

97. Are the Governors authorized to make any alteration in or addition to the building themselves, without communicating with the Commissioners for General Control and Correspondence?—Yes; they must, however, communicate with the Privy Council, not with us. They cannot add to their building or do any work for which they have not got the sanction of the Lord Lieutenant in Council; and properly speaking, I believe, under the Act of Parliament, every addition or alteration to a building should be done by the Commissioners of Control; every thing but repairs.

98. When an asylum is certified to the Lord Lieutenant to be finished, and is given up to the Governors, have you considered that your expenditure for the erection of that asylum is closed?—Yes, when all the bills are paid, and the cost certified.

99. To whom do you furnish a certified statement of the cost of such building?—We have certified the cost to the Lord Lieutenant and Council.

Communication with local authorities.

100. I think you stated, that there was no direct correspondence between your Commission and any local authority, as regards the erection, the addition to, or the enlargement of, an asylum?—Wherever there was a Board of Governors we have been in communication with them with respect to alterations, and we communicated with the Governors of Cork and Dublin Asylums respecting the new asylums.

*Submitting plans
Grand Jurors.*

101. Were plans submitted to any of the Grand Jurors?—There was a set of plans submitted to one Grand Jury, but unfortunately we cannot find the answer from them. I think the answer approved of the plans. The assizes were coming on just as the plans were ready, and we sent them down to the Grand Jury to get their opinion upon them. That was in the case of Sligo.

102. Can you give any reason why that was done in Sligo, and not in other places?—If we had made it a rule to go to each Grand Jury, we should have much delayed the building of the Asylums.

103. The Grand Juries of neighbouring counties are usually sitting at the same time, or within a week of each other. Why were not the plans submitted to the Leitrim Grand Jury?—We sent them down just at the assize time. It was a fortnight before they sent them back to us again. If I recollect aright, there was only the one case in which we did so. It was not the rule for us to send them at all; nor did we consider it our duty to consult Grand Juries on the subject, for we were responsible in the matter.

104. I gather from your evidence, that from the time an asylum has been directed by the Lord Lieutenant in Council to be provided, until such time as the whole of the expenditure has been incurred, and the accounts furnished to the respective Grand Juries of what they are to repay, neither the rate-payers nor the representatives of the rate-payers have any knowledge of what the expenditure is?—No; but that is the fault of the system.

detached counties.*

105. Are you aware of what steps, if any, have been taken for the repayment to the counties detached from old districts, of the sums they had previously paid for the erection of the old asylums?—No, I am not aware, except that I know a commission was appointed for the purpose of reporting to the Lord Lieutenant on the subject.

*Alleged

106. Is there any statement that you would wish to make, or any suggestion to offer, to the Commissioners, in reference to the law or practice in connexion with Lunatic Asylums?—There is an impression abroad that our expenditure has been an extravagant one, although the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject did not so report. I can only say, on the part of the Commissioners for the Control of Asylums, that every possible exertion has been made to prevent any thing in the shape of extravagance in the buildings. We looked most minutely into each case ourselves. It was not left to the architects to do as they chose, but all the plans were submitted to us, and well considered, before they were acted upon. With regard to ornamental work, we do not think there is any beyond what is really required for any public building erected, whether by counties or by Government. In all things we used every possible exertion to keep down the expense. With respect to the law in connexion with Lunatic Asylums, the only suggestion I have to offer is that it should be assimilated to that of England; that the Governors should be left as much as possible to manage the funds of the asylum, without the interference of Government; that the controlling authority be exercised by Commissioners in Lunacy, acting under the Lord Chancellor; that the sanction of the Lord Lieutenant, in Council, to the estimated expenditure at each asylum, be dispensed with; and that where loans are required free of interest, the Lord Lieutenant may exercise the same power with respect to them as in cases of loans for new galls.

LORD LIEUTENANT IN COUNCIL—MODE OF PROCEEDING AS TO DISTRICT ASYLUMS.

Henry Meredith Cruise, Esq., sworn and examined.

107. I believe you are clerk in the Chief Secretary's office, acting as assistant to the Clerk of the Council?—Yes.

108. What is the course of proceeding by the Lord Lieutenant in Council as regards the formation of a district, and the erection of an asylum, for the lunatic poor, under the old Acts?—The Lord Lieutenant passes an Order in Council directing an asylum to be erected and established for a certain district, to consist of a certain county or counties, capable of containing a certain number of the lunatic poor.

109. Are you aware upon what grounds the Council are moved to make that order, whether in consequence of communications from the local parties or from the Inspectors of Asylums?—In the cases of the early asylums which were first built I am not aware. In the cases of the more recently erected asylums it was the result of a long correspondence, founded on the Report of the House of Lords Select Committee, which correspondence took place in 1843 and 1844 between the Irish Government of that day, the Boards of Governors of the then existing asylums, and the Grand Jurors of the counties interested; the whole of which correspondence will be found in the Parliamentary Papers of 1844, vol. 43, pp. 261 and 293.

110. What materials have the Privy Council for deciding as to the propriety of including certain counties in a district or otherwise?—In the instances of the more recent asylums, the subject was considered by the Lord Lieutenant on his own part, and his Excellency made a communication through the Under Secretary of the day to the Privy Council, making certain recommendations as to the asylums, which the Privy Council considered.

111. Are you enabled to state what materials the Lord Lieutenant has for forming conclusions as to the propriety or otherwise of recommending such an asylum to be erected?—In the recent cases, as I have stated, there was a long correspondence with the Boards of Governors. His Excellency had this correspondence, and he had also the recommendation of the Inspectors.

112. Is it usual to give notice to the local authorities, or boards, of the subject being under the consideration of the Council, or to other parties who are interested?—It has not been so.

113. To whom are the Orders in Council directing the erection of Lunatic Asylums and the formation of districts communicated?—They are published in the Dublin Gazette, and communicated to the Chief or Under Secretary for the time being, and to the Commissioners for General Control and Correspondence.

114. Is any communication made to the Grand Jurors or the Boards of Governors of existing asylums, or the Rate-payers at Presentment Sessions?—Not that I am aware of.

115. Does the Order in Council, in addition to stating the number of inmates for whom an asylum is to be erected, specify the amount of money to be expended in the erection of the asylum, or the purchase of site?—None of the original Orders in Council did so; and there are only three asylums lately built as to which the amount is specified at all; that was in the cases of the Richmond and Belfast Asylums. In the case of Cork it was mentioned in the order for the first issue of money for erecting the asylum.

116. The case of Cork was a new asylum?—It was.

117. Was the sum to be expended in the erection of that asylum, and in the purchase of land, specified in the original order for the building of the asylum?—No; the estimate of the amount which it was to cost was specified in the first order for the issue of money, but it did not confine the expenditure to the estimate.

118. Will you furnish the Commissioners with a copy of that order?—Certainly.

119. The case of Dublin was the case of an addition to an existing asylum?—And the building of a new asylum.

120. Do not you call the whole the "Richmond Asylum"?—We do. I am speaking of the phraseology of the Order in Council, which says: "The enlargement" of the asylum, and the "erection of a new and additional asylum."

121. The case of Belfast was the enlargement of an existing asylum?—Yes.

122. You can also furnish copies of orders in these cases?—Yes.

123. Is any control exercised by the Privy Council, over the Commissioners of General Correspondence, with reference to the amount to be paid for land, or the amount to be expended in the erection of an asylum, in any other cases?—The Commissioners of Control have to apply through the Privy Council for whatever money they require for these purposes. That is the only control of which I am aware.

124. Have any applications for such issues ever been refused by the Privy Council?—Yes, recently. Large sums were expended, and after having been expended the sanction of the Privy Council was sought, which the Privy Council refused to give. The moneys were paid by the Treasury.

125. Are these the only cases of refusing to issue money?—I think these are the only cases.

126. Does the application from the Commissioners of General Control and Correspondence for money specify whether it is an advance for works to be done, or an issue required for works already executed?—The application should specify that it is an advance for works to be done.

127. Practically, have the applications contained that statement?—In almost all instances they have.

128. To what effect?—That it was for work to be done. That is the general rule. I trust to my recollection of it.

129. What information did the Privy Council possess as to the total sum which was to be expended in the erection of an asylum previous to their sanctioning the issue of money on account of it?—I find it difficult to answer that question. In some cases, the Privy Council has been furnished with information. In others, none. I should state that my connexion with the Privy Council Office is only since 1853. I do not know what was the practice as to the earlier asylums; but I am aware, from records in that office, that in the cases of some of the asylums recently built, the Commissioners of General Control only exercise control over the amount of expenditure. In more recent instances, the Privy Council have themselves exercised that control, as in the cases of the Cork, Richmond, and Belfast Asylums.

130. In the cases of Killarney, and asylums similarly circumstanced, what knowledge had the Privy Council of the gross sums which it was proposed to devote to the erection of the asylums?—No official knowledge.

131. As regards those cases in which the orders of the Privy Council stated the sums to be expended, have the applications for issues ever exceeded that sum?—No; the Commissioners for General Control have made supplemental applications for supplemental works, upon which supplemental Orders in Council sanctioning such works were made.

132. Have any Orders in Council been issued for the payment of money for works already done and not executed by the Commissioners of Control and Correspondence?—I do not know. On further consideration, I recollect a case in connexion with the Richmond Asylum, where a bequest was made for the benefit of the institution. The Governors conceived that a lodge would be advantageous, and they applied to Government to sanction an extra expenditure of £100 or so on such lodge, in addition to the bequest, and it was sanctioned.

133. To whom was that money ordered to be paid?—To the Commissioners for General Control.

to Lord Lieutenant and Council.*

134. Are the plans for Lunatic Asylums ever submitted by the Commissioners of Control to the Lord Lieutenant in Council, or approved by them?—Not that I have any recollection of.

135. Are any plans for alterations or additions, at any time, submitted to the Privy Council?—I cannot exactly say as to plans, but estimates and specifications are.

136. In all cases of alterations and additions?—In all recent cases.

*Completion of Asylums; certificate of expenditure;
what it contains.*

137. Is the completion of the asylum certified to the Government by the Commissioners of Control?—It is.

138. Is the total expenditure certified also?—It is.

139. Are the details of the expenditure communicated to the Council?—Not altogether. They are divided into "purchase of land for site" and "cost of erection." The certificate is not made until the asylum is fit for the reception of the lunatic poor. I am speaking of the practice at present. The certificate of the Commissioners states the asylum is fit for the reception of the lunatic poor.

No audit as to expenditure.

140. Does an audit for that expenditure take place, or what materials have the Council for determining whether the sums have been properly expended or not?—There is no audit.

141. Are steps taken to ascertain whether the sums certified correspond with the sums issued by the Privy Council?—In point of fact they should, because the Commissioners have no money to expend on Lunatic Asylums, by right, except what they get through the Privy Council.

counties.*

142. What steps are taken in the Privy Council Office, for apportioning the sums so certified upon the contributing counties?—The amount certified to have been expended is assessed on the counties liable, in proportion to the populations according to the last census. The Order in Council directs the Grand Jury of each county to present at the ensuing assizes such amount, so ascertained, having regard to the population, by a certain number of instalments, the first of such instalments to amount to so much, and each succeeding instalment to amount to so much. These Orders in Council, when signed, are sent to the Crown Solicitors, to lay before the Grand Jurors at the ensuing assizes; and they are instructed, if the Grand Jurors refuse to present for these sums, to apply to the Judge to place the amounts upon the levy.

town districts.*

143. Have any cases come before the Privy Council, with reference to the repayment to detached counties, of the sums they had originally contributed for the erection of the old asylums?—I think there is one instance a long time ago.

144. Can you give us the Order in Council in the case to which you refer?—Yes; if it exists.

145. I believe many similar cases are now awaiting adjudication with reference to the recently erected asylums?—There are.

146. What steps have been taken for fixing the repayment in these cases?—In the first place, the Act of Parliament gives the Lord Lieutenant in Council power to act between the counties, so that the whole amount originally levied shall not be repaid, if it be not just so to do. The Lord Lieutenant has appointed a Commission to inquire what will be fit and proper to be done with regard to such asylums, as situated, and these Commissioners have made their report with regard to one asylum, upon which no order has yet been made.

Asylums.*

147. Has the practice that you have described prevailed also with regard to the enlargement of asylums, and the erection of additional buildings, namely, the practice as regards the issue of money?—I have already specified that in these cases the amounts were always regularly issued.

148. You have furnished the Commissioners with a list of the Commissioners for Control and Correspondence who have been from time to time appointed under the 57th Geo. III., cap. 106, and subsequent Acts?—Yes.

149. Has any order been issued revoking those Commissions?—None.

150. Have the Commissioners so appointed, at any time, suggested or recommended rules and regulations for the management and good conduct of asylums in general, or for any asylum in particular?—On the completion of the Armagh Asylum, an Order in Council was passed, directing such Commissioners to prepare rules and regulations, and to submit them to the Privy Council.

151. For that asylum?—For that asylum.

152. Is there any record of any other rules and regulations suggested by the Commissioners of General Control and Correspondence?—No.

153. Were there any rules and regulations approved by the Privy Council for the government of Lunatic Asylums previous to the year 1843?—Not formally approved; but there were rules and regulations which appear to have borne the sanction of the Privy Council.

154. Is there any record in the Privy Council of such sanction having been directly given?—The way in which the matter stands is as I said before. The Commissioners were directed to draw rules and regulations, and they drew rules and regulations accordingly, and they stated they deferred submitting them to the Privy Council, for their approval, until they had been tried by the Governors of the asylum.

155. I believe general forms of accounts have been approved of by the Privy Council for the use of all asylums?—Yes.

156. Have any general forms of admission and discharge of patients been approved?—The rules, approved in 1843, refer to the form of admission which at that time existed, and long previously, and which, therefore, I suppose was sanctioned.

157. Is that a form applicable to all asylums, or is it only required by that rule that there should be adopted in each asylum a form which had previously existed, or is the form uniform throughout all the asylums?—I can best answer that by reference to documentary evidence.

158. Is there any Order in Council approving of the rules and regulations for the Armagh Asylum, or approving of any certain form of admission or discharge of patients from Lunatic Asylums?—There is no Order in Council.

159. Is there any record that instructions were given to the Commissioners of General Control and Correspondence to form rules for the government of Lunatic Asylums?—A copy of the Order in Council of the 3rd of May, 1843, has been furnished to the Commissioners, directing the Commissioners of General Control to prepare rules and regulations, to comprise an exact account of the patients, from whence removed, and also a form of admission.

160. Are you aware if any steps were taken by the Commissioners of General Control and Correspondence in consequence of that order?—It appears that the Commissioners for General Control transmitted such regulations for Lunatic Asylums, observing that "the experience of the local Governors in working the institution might best supply additional rules, or point out the expediency of altering or improving those now transmitted."

161. Nothing confirmatory of those rules was ever passed by the Council?—Nothing.

162. Is there any subsequent minute or Order of the Council referring to those rules?—There is a correspondence between the Clerk of the Council and the Manager of the Clonmel Asylum, in which the Clerk of the Council states that the Commissioners for the General Control of District Lunatic Asylums, having reported that a certain form prepared by the local Governors of the Armagh Asylum, seemed well calculated to meet the circumstances of the cases likely to be presented to them for admission, and having observed that the experience of the said local Governors in working the institution would best supply additional rules, and it being understood that the rules so established in said asylum have been usually adopted in similar institutions subsequently established, a set of these rules and regulations have been obtained by the Clerk of the Council, and are transmitted to the Manager of the Clonmel Asylum accordingly.

163. I believe the Governors of District Asylums are appointed by the Lord Lieutenant in Council?—Yes.

Appointment of Governors.

164. Are any communications made to the Council, by the Executive Government, as to the individuals to be so appointed?—They are recommended by the Lord Lieutenant, through the Chief or Under Secretary.

165. Are the names so recommended, so far as your experience goes, uniformly sanctioned by the Council?—They are uniformly sanctioned.

166. Is the number of Governors limited?—No.

167. Is there any rule as to the number which should represent each county comprised in the district?—There is no rule.

168. Are there any ex-officio Governors?—In the cases of some asylums there are; in others none.

169. Are the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums appointed Governors, ex-officio, or were they nominally appointed?—There is an Order in Council, appointing the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums ex-officio Governors of every Lunatic Asylum in Ireland.

Of Inspectors as Governors.

170. Are they appointed by name, "Dr. White and Dr. Nugent," or are they appointed as "Inspectors"?—The Inspectors, I think; I will give a copy of the order.

171. Are the Governors, as a body, in the habit of communicating with the Clerk of the Privy Council, in reference to the asylums under their charge?—They transmit applications for issues of money for support and maintenance. They sometimes make communications to the Chief or Under Secretary of the Lord Lieutenant, and sometimes to the Council Office directly.

Communications between Governors and Clerk of Council.

172. On what subjects?—With reference to works at Lunatic Asylums, the expenditure of money, or any such matter.

DEBATE

Lord Lieutenant in Council—Made of Proceeding as to Lunatic Asylums.
H. M. GLEN, Esq.

Issue of maintenance money for Asylums, applications from Governors.

173. You have stated the Governors make applications for the issue of money for ordinary expenditure; do these applications come direct to the Privy Council?—They come direct to the Government, by whom they are referred to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums for examination.

174. When examined by the Inspectors, are they transmitted to the Council?—They are, with a certificate of their correctness.

175. In issuing money for the maintenance of asylums, are the Privy Council guided by the sum which the Inspectors certified to be correct, or by the original amount applied for by the Governors?—By the sum certified by the Inspectors, if the Privy Council approve of any alterations made by such Inspectors.

176. Practically, are the alterations made by the Inspectors usually adopted?—Yes.

177. Has it frequently happened that alterations have been made by the Inspectors?—Not frequently, except as to small errors in the furnishing of the estimate.

178. Would any proposed expenditure for the erection of new works be included in these applications for maintenance money?—They should not be so included. Occasionally they have been included, but they have been disallowed.

179. What check are the Privy Council enabled to apply to the estimates of the Governors, from any data which exist in their office as regards the number of inmates?—At present the money is issued on a certificate of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums.

180. That is a recent arrangement?—Since the appointment of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums.

181. What steps are taken to apportion the sums so advanced, in respect of asylums, upon the counties forming the district?—The Boards of Governors furnish, half-yearly, certified returns, setting forth the amount chargeable upon each county, which they calculate by the number of patients coming from each county; and Orders in Council are made upon these certificates, directing the counties to present the sums so certified.

182. I believe the sum which the Council may issue for the maintenance of asylums is limited?—Any sum under £10,000, in any one quarter of the year, for each asylum. This is regulated by Act of Parliament.

183. Are you aware of Grand Juries having refused to present the sums which have been so directed to be levied?—Yes.

184. What steps have been taken to enforce compliance?—Recently, a case occurred in the instance of the Belfast District Lunatic Asylum. The Government appointed chaplains to that asylum. The Governors of the asylum opposed the appointment. They sent up the estimates for the current expenditure of the quarter, without having in them any provision made for the salaries of the chaplains. The Council directed the estimates to be returned, and the salaries to be inserted. The Governors of the asylum refused to insert them, and sent back the estimates without doing so. The Council then directed the Clerk of the Council to insert the salaries in the estimates, and an Order in Council was issued, directing the issue of the whole amount, so contained in the estimate, including the salaries, which amount was sent down to the Governors. They did not pay any of the amount to the chaplains; and at the ensuing assizes, when called on to present, not alone the sums which had been expended on the institution, but also the sums which ought to have been paid to the chaplains, the Grand Jury refused to present, on the ground that the money had not been paid, and that it should not have been paid. Thereupon an application was made to the Court to make the presentment, and to put it upon the levy, and it was put upon the levy accordingly.

185. Was there any further proceeding?—The Grand Jury obtained a writ of certiorari, and they brought it into the Court of Queen's Bench in order to have the presentment removed. The Court refused to make any order in the matter; and the consequence was, that at each subsequent assizes the Judge, when called on to put the amount upon the levy, ordered it to be done, and also the chaplain's salaries, conditional upon whatever might be the result of the legal proceedings then pending. The Government had applied to the Court of Queen's Bench to issue a mandamus to compel the Governors of the asylum to pay the amounts with which they had been intrusted for the salaries of the chaplains. After a considerable time the Court of Queen's Bench refused to give the mandamus, and thereupon the Government desisted from sending down any further sum to pay the salaries of the Chaplains, nor was any subsequent application made to the Judge of Assize.

186. Has any thing further been done?—I do not know. I am not aware whether the money was ever raised and levied off the county or not. I rather suspect it was not.

187. What has been done with the money?—The Governors have it in their hands.

188. Does the Order in Council requiring the Grand Jury to make presentment for the repayment of the monies advanced for building, direct that it shall be repaid by certain instalments at certain periods?—Yes.

189. Is that the general principle, or one applicable to local circumstances?—With reference to building asylums, and other works of an extensive nature, it is; it is upon the general principle, namely, that the period of repayment shall extend over fourteen years. With reference to smaller sums, the Council exercise their discretion.

190. As to the repairs of buildings, I presume the expenditure on that head is included in the maintenance of asylums for which issues are made by the Privy Council from time to time?—I should say yes, unless it be for some very important repairs.

191. Have the Privy Council made any orders with reference to the appointment of officers?—Not with regard to the appointment of officers; they have with regard to the appointment of servants.

Apportionment of the cost of maintenance upon counties forming districts.

Appointment of servants.

192. State what orders have been made?—In the rules of 1843, the 66th rule states, that as the Manager is responsible for the character, qualification, and conduct of all the servants of the asylum, he is to have the appointment of them, subject to the approval of the Board.

193. That relates to the servants. Who, practically, appoints the superior officers?—The Lord Lieutenant.

194. Does he appoint all except the servants—including the chaplain, matron, steward, and clerk?—The matron, certainly.

195. Are you enabled to state what officers are appointed by the Lord Lieutenant?—At present, the physician and manager, the matron, and the visiting physician, if any such there be.

196. Are there such officers as physician and also visiting physician besides the manager?—I will furnish the Commissioners with a list of the officers so appointed. (See Appendix.)

197. Is there any direct power given by the Act of Parliament to the Lord Lieutenant enabling him to make those appointments?—I believe it is generally understood, that no section of any Act of Parliament directly gives to the Lord Lieutenant the power of making such appointments, except by inference from the general powers given to his Excellency in reference to the asylums.

198. Have the Privy Council ever made an order appropriating any asylum or addition to an asylum, for the reception of any particular class of lunatics, under the 8th and 9th Vic. cap. 107?—None. There is an Order in Council directing the enlargement of the Ballinacree Asylum so as to admit of a certain number of wards being fitted up for a certain number of acute cases. That is the only case approaching at all to what you speak of.

199. Have the Privy Council ever ordered any provincial asylum to be erected for the like object?—No.

200. I believe the Lord Lieutenant and Council have made rules and regulations for the holding of lectures in the Lunatic Asylums?—Such regulations have been made by an Order in Council.

201. Are you aware whether such lectures are given?—I am not.

INSPECTORS OF LUNATIC ASYLUMS—GENERAL STATE OF ASYLUMS AND LUNACY.

Francis White, Esq., Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, sworn and examined.

202. I believe you are one of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums in Ireland?—Yes.

203. And previously held the office of Inspector-General of Prisons?—I did.

204. As Inspector of Lunatic Asylums you performed all the duties which were previously performed by the Inspector-General of Prisons under the 7th Geo. IV. cap. 74?—Yes.

205. You also discharge the duties with which the Inspectors of Prisons were charged under the 8th and 9th Vic. cap. 123, and the Acts continuing the same?—Yes.

206. Your present appointment was under the 8th and 9th Vic. cap. 107?—Yes; section 24.

207. By the 55th section of the 7th Geo. IV. cap. 74, it is directed that each of the two Inspectors-General of Prisons shall, once at least, in every year, go round each of the two circuits alternately into which Ireland was divided, and visit and inspect every mad-house and place where lunatics or idiots are confined, whether the same be a public establishment or kept for profit by any private individual. Are those duties now performed?—Those duties are now performed.

208. The inspection of these institutions forms a portion of the report which is to be made by you to the Lord Lieutenant?—Yes.

209. How often do you now report?—For the last eight years we have reported every second year. It is not so imperative to report to the Lord Lieutenant under the 8th and 9th Vic. latterly as it was. We have exercised a discretion under the present Act, within the last eight years, of reporting only every second year.

210. What section of the Act to which you refer, the 8th and 9th Vic. cap. 107, relieves you from the obligation of reporting once in each year?—So far as I am aware, there is no direct mention of the necessity for doing so. We report so frequently in private reports to his Excellency, that we consider those in themselves sufficient information for the Government; and then we report the entire proceedings after the lapse of two years. We also report annually to the Lord Lieutenant and the Lord Chancellor on Private Asylums, under the 5 & 6 Vic. c. 123.

211. Under the Prisons' Act to which I have referred, I find that the reports of the Inspector-General of Prisons, which comprised reports upon these Lunatic Asylums, were to be submitted to the Grand Juries in each year?—They were.

212. Are such reports now submitted to the Grand Juries?—Annually; and now bi-annual reports are transmitted to the secretaries of Grand Juries and to each Governor through the resident physician or manager of the asylum.

213. Am I to understand that no reports are furnished to the secretaries of Grand Juries direct through your office?—You must understand that they are sent direct from our office—the annual or bi-annual reports—through, as I stated before, the resident physician or manager.

214. "Through" is not "direct." Are they sent from your office direct to the secretaries of the Grand Juries?—Allow me to explain. The question appears to refer to the provisions of the 7th Geo. IV., c. 74, sec. 56, under which the Inspectors-General of Prisons, when acting as Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, were required to report specially to the Grand Juries through their secretary; receiving, under the Act, the sum of £200 in consideration of such report. These reports and payments ceased (as regards lunatics) on the separation of the office of Lunatic Asylums from the Prisons' Office, in 1846.

215. At present what copies of reports are sent to the Grand Juries by the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums?—Our bi-annual report to the Lord Lieutenant in relation to the asylums of Ireland.

216. Are any copies of reports relative to the particular institutions within the districts of the Grand Juries sent to them pursuant to the 56th section of the Prison Act?—No; we considered that sending our bi-annual reports embracing all these points, was a substantial compliance with the section.

217. Under the 8th and 9th Vic., cap. 107, it appears the Inspectors are to visit, once in each year, every asylum for lunatics or houses for the reception of the same, every house, union workhouse, or house of industry, in which there may be, or alleged to be, any lunatics. Is that duty fully performed?—It is fully performed, with this exception, that all the poorhouses have not been uniformly inspected in each year. And, in my opinion, it would not be practicable for us, consistently with the due discharge of our other and more important duties, to make an annual inspection of the entire of the poorhouses. The increasing amount of our office business has, lately, rendered it more difficult for us to perform this complete inspection of the poorhouses. We always inspect those, however, which are crowded, or contain several lunatics or urgent cases. My colleague and I divide the country, geographically speaking, into two districts, for the purpose of each annual inspection: he taking the north and I the south one year, and vice versa the next. All goals in which lunatics are confined are uniformly inspected by us. Occasionally, on visiting poorhouses, it occurs that there are no lunatic inmates.

218. Do you keep a diary of your inspections throughout the year?—They are entered in a book in our office.

219. You will, therefore, be enabled to furnish the Commissioners with a statement of the number of visits paid to every institution which by law you are obliged to visit, within each year, specifying these by each Inspector?—Yes.

220. Upon this inspection of the asylums referred to in the 24th section of the above Act, have you regularly inquired into the admission or discharge of the patients confined in those asylums?—Yes, always.

221. Is the form of admission for patients into the asylums uniform throughout Ireland?—The forms differ in some asylums. We are adopting a uniform one for all asylums. Generally speaking, I think they are pretty much similar, with very few exceptions. There are printed forms for every asylum.

222. Am I to understand that there is no form which has been legally approved by the Privy Council, or other competent authority, under which patients are admitted into asylums?—These forms existed before the Privy Council rules were passed, and it was left to each Board to draw out such forms as they considered best.

223. You refer to the rules of 1843?—Yes; and when I became Inspector, I found printed forms to all the asylums that I visited.

224. Is the form of admission which is in use in each asylum applicable to all the cases which may be admitted into that asylum?—Yes, it is.

225. Whether it be the case of a dangerous inmate, under the 1st of Vic., cap. 27; a lunatic pauper person, admitted under the general law; or a person transferred from a workhouse, or any other institution?—Dangerous lunatics are not admitted on the usual form. They are brought before a magistrate, and if found to be such, they are sent direct to goal, without any form except the magistrate's commitment. They are kept in goal until the Inspectors ascertain they are proper cases to be removed to the asylum, when they write down for the medical certificates, in order to lay them before the Lord Lieutenant, to obtain his warrant for the transmission of the patient direct to the district asylum, when vacancies occur. That is done without any printed form such as I have alluded to.

226. What form of admission is used in the case of paying patients?—The same form as that for paupers, with this exception, that there is introduced a statement that the person applying, or his family, will be able to pay a rateable portion of the average cost per head.

227. Is that in the nature of a bond obliging the person to make the payment?—It is not; it is left to the character and honour of the parties. And I should also premise that the law is so vague (both the 8th & 9th Vic., and the former Acts) as to admitting paying patients into the asylums, that in some asylums they refuse them. There have been differences of opinion amongst the law officers of the Crown on that very head. At the Maryborough Asylum, within the last half-year, there was an application for the admission of a paying patient. I thought it was a case that should be received, but there was brought forward a document showing that some years past the opinion of the then law officers was had upon the subject, and that they stated that the law would not permit it.

228. The Governors are in the habit, I presume, of admitting such patients without communicating with the Inspectors. May they not do so?—They may do so.

229. Do the Inspectors receive a regular statement of each admission into the asylums?—No, they do not, except in this way, that the monthly reports are sent up to us by the Boards, and the number of patients received on that day, or discharged, or dismissed, is stated. We get, in that way, an account of every patient admitted, discharged, or otherwise, and the general results in each month.

Information of Inspectors as to admissions and discharges.

230. Does that statement distinguish the various classes of patients admitted?—It does.
 231. Whether paying, or pauper patients, or dangerous patients?—Yes, by name.
 232. Under what regulations are such returns furnished to the Inspectors?—In consequence of a request from the Inspectors to the Privy Council, an order to that effect was issued. We find it a most useful arrangement.

233. With regard to the discharge of patients from the asylums, what is the course of your inspection in that respect?—The resident physician and visiting physician inspect every patient, and report to the Board of Governors the cases they consider it to be discharged; and the proceedings at that Board are transmitted to our office. We know of the discharge of such patients by the report from the manager or resident physician.

234. Do you check the discharges which you find to have taken place on visiting the asylums with the returns then made?—Yes.

235. What number constitutes a quorum of the Board of Governors?—Three.

236. Is it only by the authority of the Board the patients will be discharged?—By the authority of the Board. In the meantime, if the family or friends of one who is perfectly cured, apply for his discharge, the physician may take it on himself to discharge him, he reporting to the Board the peculiar circumstances of the case. Generally speaking—uniformly I may almost say, with few exceptions—the sanction of the Board is required for the discharge of a patient.

237. The physician is empowered to discharge?—I will not say that he is.

238. In some cases he does, subject to the approval of the Board?—Yes, subject to the approval of the Board, to whom he must make a report on the subject. The relatives or friends of an inmate, finding he is cured, may press to take him away before a meeting of the Board is held; and there is no law that I am aware of to justify the detention of the party, provided it is reported that he is perfectly cured.

239. By whom is the order made for the admission of patients into the asylums?—The applications are brought before the Board. Say there are half a dozen cases, some of which are more urgent than others. The physician is always present, and he is asked as to which are the most urgent cases, and these are admitted. The Chairman signs the admission, with the consent of the Board. It is understood that every case is investigated.

240. The authority for the admissions is the Minute of the Board?—Always.

241. Has the Manager any authority to receive patients who are brought to the asylum between the meetings of the Board?—Under the circumstances I have stated he has. Under the sixth Privy Council rule, he has authority to receive a case proved to be very urgent, he reporting it to the Board on the next Board day, to obtain their sanction for having taken the step. He must report all the circumstances of the case. Many cases are received under the sixth rule, which is a very good rule on the subject.

242. Is it always discretionary with the Governors whether they will receive a patient or not?—It is.

243. When a patient is admitted by the Board is any form of certificate, beyond the medical certificate of his insanity, required?—Yes; in the body of the form there is a certificate from some person, a magistrate or a clergyman, stating his opinion also of the party being of unsound mind.

244. There is no information on oath accompanying that?—Yes, the next of kin makes an affidavit that the party is of unsound mind.

245. Can you furnish us with copies of these certificates, as used in each asylum?—I can.

246. Is there any authority on the part of a Justice of the Peace to commit directly any person to an asylum?—None; nor has a Governor even the power. There has been great delay, and there is still, in the admission of lunatics, in consequence of the Boards of Governors holding only monthly meetings.

247. I see that a bond is to be given by a responsible person, before the admission of a patient, for his removal in proper time?—Well, that was established for some time, but I must say it was not followed up, and I will tell you why; we found there was no party could exact the legal payment of it, and it was taken more for the moral effect arising from it.

248. Was it a bond to the Crown?—No, it was the usual bond in the wording of it, to the Manager and Board.

249. Do the local Boards of Governors of Asylums meet more frequently than once a month?—In Cork and in Dublin they do.

250. How frequently do they meet in these places?—Twice a month in Dublin. They have fallen off in Cork. There is a Committee that meets, probably, once every fortnight. The regular Board meeting is held every month.

251. With these two exceptions, the Boards competent to admit patients meet only monthly?—Yes.

252. I believe the rules and regulations require they should meet once a month?—Yes.

253. Besides the general meetings?—Besides the half-yearly meetings to prepare the accounts for the Grand Juries, and at those there must be five to make a quorum.

254. With regard to the admission of patients to District Asylums on Board days or otherwise, do the Boards of Governors, as a body, give a preference to lunatics who have been confined in gaols or workhouses, before admitting the lunatic poor of the district when they apply?—The Inspectors exercise a good deal of influence in those cases; and in consequence of the want of proper means of treatment in gaols, give a preference to lunatics from them. The Governors generally, and, in some instances, the medical officers of asylums, however, would prefer admitting ordinary applicants.

Non-attendance of Governors.

253. Does it ever occur that the monthly meeting does not take place in consequence of the non-attendance of a quorum?—Often.

256. Are the patients for whose admission applications are made then thrown back for another month?—They are; unless in cases of urgency.

254. Has it ever come to your knowledge that two successive months have passed without a quorum being formed of a Board of Governors?—Yes.

258. Has it ever come to your knowledge that three months have elapsed?—Yes.

259. Has it ever come to your knowledge that four months have elapsed?—I cannot say so far as that. You are aware that the Inspectors are members of those Boards. In Waterford what you have asked about occurred, and in order to form a Board either of the Inspectors went down, and called upon one or two members living in the town to attend with him.

260. Then a case which might require to be admitted might be so long as three months, from the time of the application, without being received into the asylum in consequence of a sufficient number of Governors not attending to form a Board?—Yes, unless in the case of the sixth rule, which I have pointed out.

261. Notwithstanding the omission to hold such meetings, the lunatics in gaols may still be transmitted to the asylums by order of the Lord Lieutenant?—Yes.

262. Do the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums attend many of the monthly meetings of the local Governors?—They do.

263. And take part in the admission of patients?—And take part in the admission of patients and in the general proceedings of the Board. I have given a good deal of attendance on the governing boards. I suppose I have been in Cork six times within the last eight or ten months, and invariably took part in the proceedings of the Board, except voting upon fiscal matters, as to which they feel a great deal of jealousy, and I have invariably see voted upon questions of that nature.

264. When the Inspectors visit the district asylums either to attend the meetings of the local Board, or at other times, is there any intimation given that they are coming to the asylum?—No; generally speaking we are quite unexpected. It might be the case that there was a particular question coming on, at the consideration of which it would be necessary for the Inspectors to be present, and the Manager and Resident Physician may know of the coming of the Inspector.

265. These are exceptional cases?—Those are exceptional cases.

266. Do you think the non-attendance of Governors is to be at all attributed to the distance at which they reside from the institutions?—Well, to a certain extent it depends a good deal upon that; for instance, in Ballinacree we cannot get Governors immediately in the district. Some parts of the district are very distant. Some of the western parts of Mayo, where Governors reside, are sixty miles from the asylum. Some active Governors are thirty miles distant, and it is certainly a very great inconvenience to them to attend, especially in winter.

267. Practically, do paying patients who have been admitted continue to be paid for according to the arrangement made?—Generally, I think, they do.

268. Three constitute the quorum of a Board?—Yes.

269. Suppose a member goes out of the room—three being only three present—is any business transacted after he leaves?—If he has left not to return that day, I think in that case there is no business done, except that the others would finish what it was understood before he left should be done.

270. Has it ever come to your knowledge that in a case where, say two members have entered the Board-room, and, not seeing any probability of a meeting, have gone away, a third member subsequently came, and the three names which would form a quorum appearing on the book, business has been transacted?—I am not aware of any such conduct as that; but I am aware of the case of three members being present and doing the general business, and one of them having gone away on the understanding that he connected to what was before them when he left, that business was completed after his departure.

271. Have any representations been made by the Inspectors to the Lord Lieutenant of the inconveniences arising from the distances at which Governors reside from the asylums, with reference to the failure to form a Board?—Yes; and we have recommended the appointment of competent persons who lived near the asylums and could attend, with the view of insuring the formation of Boards.

272. Does not the arrangement of a district very often prevent a large number of Governors being selected from the immediate vicinity of an asylum, as thereby a particular county might have too great a preponderance on the Board?—That has been complained of. I should state, in justice to the Governors generally, as an explanation of their non-attendance, that they have usually a large number of Boards and other duties to attend to. They have to attend County Boards, Poor Law Boards, Infirmary Boards, and so on; so that it really comes very hard on a country gentleman who lives far from an asylum to attend. These things account for the non-attendance.

273. Is it the practice at any of the asylums for the General Board to appoint a sub-committee, or a small number of members, who may act as a regulating body, to look after those details that could not be brought under the cognizance of the General Board?—On the recommendation of the Inspectors, in some of the asylums, that has been followed practically.

274. Has that been attended with good results?—It has been attended with good results.

Inspector's attendance at Board, and visits to Asylums.

Cause of Governors' non-attendance.

Sub-Committee of Governors.

275. Is it a practice you recommend?—It is, certainly, and one that we have established in several of the asylums.

276. Does it exist in all?—It does not; but where it does it is attended with the best effect.

277. What is your opinion as to the propriety of those who inspect the asylums being themselves members of the governing body of the asylum?—I must answer that in this way: that it has its advantages and its disadvantages. Our view originally was, that where meetings of Boards had not been held, in consequence of the non-attendance of Governors, we should make it our business to attend, in order to constitute a board, and not have the admission of patients delayed. I think it has worked well so far; but, on the other hand, there is a degree of jealousy attached to it. Generally speaking, we stand unassumingly well with the Boards, and they act according to our opinions; but, in two or three instances, we think the Board feel the system has not worked well: the Inspectors sitting at the Board with Governors with whom they cannot always coincide. If the Inspectors were more independent of the Board, and had greater powers than the Act at present gives them, they then could act with more effect than they can when they are sitting at Boards, when they must either approve or dissent as individuals. Many things occur at Boards that the Inspectors cannot approve of; and still they are parties to those things, by the fact of their being Governors. That is the disadvantage of their being Governors; but, on the other hand, as I told you before, we find it to have worked well. In Waterford, as I have already stated, we were instrumental in forming Boards, in order to have the business done. We have gone then to Carlow and to several other places for the same purpose.

278. Your opinion, I think, comes to this, that there is a single advantage arising from the Inspectors being members of the Boards—namely, that they assist to make up Boards, where one would not otherwise be formed, in consequence of the non-attendance of members, to admit patients?—That is one advantage.

279. But there are many advantages on the other side, which would conduce, on many points, to the well working of the institutions, if the Inspectors were placed in a position similar to that of the Poor Law Inspectors, having a right to sit at a Board without being a member of it?—Yes, provided he had more powers than are possessed under the present Act. It is useless for the Inspectors to be present, without having powers vested in them. What gave us some power was being members of the Board. We have scarcely any power except in the way of inspection.

280. The Inspectors under the Poor Law Commission take part in the proceedings of Boards of Guardians, but cannot vote. What power would you propose to give the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, which they could exercise instead of their being members of the Boards?—That is a very important and material question; and I would wish to refer to papers to show you that at present our powers are very limited, and what consequences result. For instance, in the matter of diet, we often point out to Boards the necessity of raising the scale of diet, and urge them to do so, and they outvote us. There are other points connected with the administration and well-being of the institutions, respecting which Boards will not agree in our views. Powers, I think, ought to be given to the Inspectors to carry out measures which they strictly considered would be for the benefit of the institutions.

281. Then your view is, that on some points the Inspectors attending the Board should have power to direct, contrary to the sense of the Board?—That is a very strong way of putting it, and I would not like to have it put that way. I do not like to be put in such antagonism with the Boards in my evidence, as that mode of stating it would indicate.

282. You have stated the means by which ordinary patients may be discharged. Patients who have been transferred by warrant of the Lord Lieutenant may be discharged under different provisions of the law?—There is a section of the 9th and 10th Vic., authorizing the physician to discharge such a patient, if he considered him of sound mind, or that he has ceased to be a dangerous lunatic.

283. Is there any provision which prevents the discharge of an ordinary patient, who may not have been cured, but who yet may be curable?—There is no provision to prevent it. If the family wish to take him away, they may do so; but, generally speaking, he is kept till either he is cured or has become incurable.

284. Have cases come to your knowledge of patients who were curable, but had not been cured, having been removed without their friends soliciting the removal?—No.

285. No such cases have occurred in order to make room for the admission of worse cases of lunacy?—Not that I am aware of. I should add that in some incurable cases coming from workhouses, for instance, the patients have become so harmless and quiet, that we have often recommended a correspondence to be entered into with the Poor Law authorities, with the view of having the cases taken back, in order to allow of more urgent cases being received. That has occurred in several cases, but not generally.

286. Have the Poor Law Commissioners any authority to direct the Guardians to receive back patients of that class?—No.

287. Have the Poor Law Commissioners, at any time that you are aware of, expressed themselves favourable or otherwise to patients being detained in workhouses?—Generally speaking, they would rather not have them, and you know the difficulty of sending a case out of an asylum. If a case that is sent from a workhouse turns out either cured or incurable, we cannot compel the posthouse authorities to take the patient back.

288. I believe the same quorum is required for the discharge as for the admission of a patient?—Yes.

Management of Asylums—medical attendance.

Supply and compounding of medicines.

Surgical attendance

289. If a patient be recovered shortly after the meeting of the local Board, and that there be no meeting for near a month, or perhaps another month, is there any means by which the patient could obtain his discharge?—No; unless the family would insist upon taking him out, he is kept over.

290. It may be for three months?—Well, it might be for a month.

291. Is there a provision of the law authorizing the sending out of patients upon trial or probation?—There is no such provision of the law, and it would be most material to have such. We do, however, send them out.

292. Are you aware there is such a provision in England?—Yes.

293. Is there any thing analogous to it here?—No. We do send out cases on trial; but we are not authorized by law to do so. It would be a very wise and useful provision, particularly in reference to private asylums. We have not the power in the case of private asylums of recommending patients to be sent to the sea-side, or other places, and it would be a very material improvement if we were enabled to do so.

294. On your inspection do you make full inquiry into the management of the asylums, and ascertain whether the duties of the respective officers are discharged according to the rules in force?—Invariably.

295. Are any of the asylums under the management of non-professional men?—Yes; Armagh, Waterford, Londonderry, and the Richmond.

296. What additional provision is made for the attendance of medical men upon these asylums?—None, except a visiting physician, and an apothecary to compound the medicines.

297. Where the manager is non-medical, I presume there is no resident physician?—No.

298. How frequently are the visits of the physician paid in such cases?—The Council rule is three times a week, where the number of patients is under 250, but oftener if necessary, if there are urgent cases.

299. At any time in cases of emergency?—Yes.

300. Is there any record kept at the asylums, by which, on inspection, you can ascertain whether those visits have been made or not?—Yes; the regular daily book has a column for recording the attendance of all the officers, and the length of time of each visit. We can furnish you with a copy of that book.

301. Where the manager of an asylum is not professional, what is the usual distance at which the medical attendant resides from the asylum?—In the fourteen cases I referred to, the medical men reside in the adjoining towns. In Waterford, the residence of the physician is about half a mile from the asylum; in the Armagh case, about the same; in Londonderry, about the same. They are always ready on emergencies. They are men of high professional character and great experience.

302. Where there is not a resident medical officer, on whom rests the responsibility of sending for the medical attendant?—The Manager. He is supposed to be on the spot. If he is not there, and that an urgent case occurs, the matron, or clerk, or store-keeper may send.

303. In such an institution, if the physician or surgeon prescribe medicines to be administered, or measures to be taken with regard to the sick, who compounds the medicines, or performs those minor duties occasionally required?—In all asylums there is a room appropriated for the compounding of medicines, and the apothecaries live in the towns near the asylums. If medicine is suddenly ordered, it is at hand; and if too much delay would be occasioned by sending for the apothecary, in a case of great urgency, the physician himself would compound the prescription. It is reported they have done so; but, generally speaking, when the physician attends, the apothecary attends with him, whether the visits are weekly or daily, and receives his instructions. Directions are given to the nurses and proper parties to see that the medicines are duly given.

304. Who provides the stock of medicines in the asylums?—The want book states from the physician and apothecary the medicines necessary in the asylum. They generally send up to Dublin, to their druggists, to have medicines sent down.

305. That is the stock of medicines in the institution?—Yes; in the institution.

306. I think I understood you to say that in some cases the apothecaries reside in the adjoining towns?—In all cases.

307. Who supplies the stock of medicines which he compounds?—The apothecary comes to the asylum to make up out of the stock there—the medicines ordered. In the Belfast Asylum they had a surgeon-apothecary who did this; in Cork Asylum they have a surgeon besides an apothecary. In very large asylums they have surgeons who will bleed, and cup, and do all such things; but generally it is the apothecary who performs these duties.

308. Is there any instance in which there is only one medical attendant?—He must be a qualified physician or surgeon.

309. Suppose he is merely a physician, is there any guarantee as to his surgical knowledge?—I will not say there is. We have a very eminent man physician to the Armagh Asylum. He is not a surgeon, nor does he practise surgery; but if there was a surgical case, a surgeon would be called in, and of course the Board would pay the cost; but that is not generally recognised. I am speaking only of urgent surgical cases.

310. Is there a prescription book kept in every institution?—There is; and the Inspector inspects it when he goes down, and he sees that the medicine department is properly conducted.

311. Is there an infirmary or hospital generally attached to each asylum?—Not generally. In the new asylums we have established of late, with the exception of one in Mullingar, we have detached infirmaries. We have them for instance at the Omagh, Killarney, and Sligo Asylums, and one or two others. We have wings for the same purpose in other new asylums, such as Mullingar. It was intended to have an infirmary in connexion with the Mullingar Asylum. The asylum was built for a very large number of patients, and there being no prospect of having it filled for many years, two wings that project from the main building were appropriated for male and female infirmaries.

312. Where infirmaries do not exist—and that appears to be the case in most of the asylums—must the patients be treated in their own rooms?—In some cases they must. The Londonderry Asylum is built on the old radiating plan, and one of the wings on the male side, and another on the female side, are appropriated as infirmaries, and to those the sick are brought.

313. Then those wings are really infirmaries?—They are.

314. Then are there in every asylum what we may call "sick wards," appropriated for the treatment of the sick?—There are.

315. Is there any rule as to the cases which are to be treated in those separate wards or infirmaries and those that may be treated in their own rooms; or is it left partly to the discretion of the manager or the attending physician?—The cases that are removed to the infirmary are generally cases of acute bodily diseases.

316. Is there a dietary table of low, medical, and full diet, as applied to the sick, separate from the ordinary diet of the establishment?—Yes.

317. Are those dietary tables uniform through all the asylums?—I cannot say they are.

318. By whom are the dietary tables for the sick framed?—They are framed by the attending physician, and where there is a resident physician, by him. They both consult the Inspector, and we generally form a medical board, lay down a scale of dietary, and place it before the Board of Governors. The Inspector and physicians agree amongst themselves as to the propriety of having a higher scale of diet, and we then submit our opinion to the Board. We say we are of opinion these are the proper scales of dietary for the sick, or the general inmates.

319. Is there, in addition to that, a book of extras?—There is a book of extras.

320. Do you give chickens amongst extras?—Yes, any thing ordered by the physician, wine, rice, chickens, chops, sage, and all medical comforts.

321. What part does the medical manager of the asylum take in the medical treatment of the patients?—When there is a good understanding between him and the visiting physician, he takes an active part concurrently with the latter.

322. But, strictly speaking, his duties are those prescribed for the manager in the rules of 1843?—Precisely.

323. Do injurious consequences arise where the two medical men do not work harmoniously together?—The consequences are, that the resident man is apprehensive that if he were to interfere in the treatment of a case, it would be objected to by the visiting physician, and so much so, that he altogether declines acting medically.

324. What relief can be afforded by a non-medical manager in a case of sudden emergency, of a patient choking or having attempted to commit suicide?—He must only trust to his own knowledge and ingenuity where there is not a medical man resident. I will give you an instance of the cases you refer to. A man was choking some years ago in the Richmond Asylum. The Richmond Surgical Hospital is within three minutes' run of the asylum; the surgeon from that came up, and I believe in one instance saved the man's life. But various accidents occur in asylums, and death takes place, in consequence of there not being a medical man on the spot. One man, I think, was choked from the want of immediate medical assistance.

325. You attach great importance to the fact of a manager of an asylum possessing medical skill, although he should not have any direct medical charge of the patients?—I do.

326. Are you in favour, therefore, of the principle which has recently prevailed of appointing medical men to the situation of manager?—Certainly. I think in large asylums, such as the Richmond, Cork, Limerick, and Ballynascree, the duty of manager and medical man are so onerous, that there ought to be a steward, like what they have in England, to conduct the fiscal business of the asylum. It is too much for a medical manager to be in his office, as I see them, preparing accounts for the Board, and doing other things. It would be a great acquisition to our asylums to have a general superintendent, or a lay manager or steward, immediately under the resident physician.

327. What is your opinion as to the position the medical manager of an asylum ought to occupy with reference to the moral and medical treatment?—I think he should have full control, subject, of course, to consultation with the visiting physician, who I think is necessary, so as not to leave entirely the whole medical management to a man who probably never goes outside the asylum.

328. You think an advantage is derived from the visiting physician being in general practice, and not confined to that of the asylum?—Yes.

329. I understand you to propose that the lay or non-professional duties at present discharged by the manager should be delegated to another officer, and that the medical man should become the resident physician of the asylum?—Yes. I mean I would have the medical man as the superintendent of the whole place, and that I would place the moral and medical treatment immediately under him, subject, of course, to the visiting physician, who would come there and consult with him as to the treatment to be adopted. Generally speaking, the medical men resident in asylums should have both a medical and a surgical degree.

330. Suppose a difference of opinion to exist between the resident medical manager and the visiting physician as to the treatment, to whom would you give the paramount authority in the matter?—To the visiting physician in cases of bodily disease.

331. The keepers are appointed by the Board of Governors?—They are.

332. Is there any rule with reference to the number of attendants for a given number of patients?—Yes; not exactly by the Boards. They are directed a good deal by the Inspectors in that and by the medical attendant.

333. Have you, as Inspectors, suggested any proportion?—Yes, we have. I think, generally speaking, we have more attendants in proportion to the number of inmates in Ireland than there is in England. Dr. Connolly and I had a discussion on that very subject. At that time they had but one attendant to every seventeen patients at Hanwell. I hear they have more since the non-restraint system came into operation. They are obliged to have more. I think our proportion is, on an average, one attendant to twelve or fourteen patients.

334. I will ask the same question with reference to the medical officers of asylums in relation to the patients?—In Dublin we have between 500 and 600 patients at the Richmond. The original medical staff of that asylum was one senior physician and a physician extraordinary. The senior physician was very aged, and he got the Government to appoint an assistant, who was called the physician extraordinary; he conducted the business. When I was surgeon to it, we were the only two medical men attending, and we had about 300 patients to look after. Since the death of the late Dr. Jackson, a second physician was appointed, in consequence of the new asylum built adjoining the old Richmond Asylum, and which contains now 150 patients. A third physician has been appointed in consequence of the duties of the other two being so onerous. He has been appointed since the new asylum was opened, which the others were unable to go up to attend. The old asylum held over 400.

335. In which does the manager reside?—The manager resides in the old one. I should state further as to the medical staff, that besides the three physicians, there is a surgeon, who attends both the institutions in common, and there is a resident apothecary and two clinical clerks. That is the medical staff.

336. When you state you have communicated your views upon different points to the Boards of Governors, do you mean, that when attending the Boards, you suggested such things, or that you made them the subject of separate communications from the Inspectors' office?—Both one and the other. We make suggestions at the Board, and often write to them our opinions.

337. Of course there is no record of any verbal communication you make to the Boards?—No. Probably a minute of it may appear in the monthly proceedings.

Inspector of Lunatic Asylums—General State of Asylums and Lunacy—con. Francis White, Esq., F.R.C.S.I., Apothecaries of Asylums.

338. Are the duties of apothecary to the several lunatic asylums discharged satisfactorily?—We have heard no complaints on the subject; but in large institutions—such as those of Cork and Limerick—I think it would be desirable to have a resident apothecary, the asylums are so extensive.

339. Is there a resident apothecary in any of the district asylums?—No, except in the Richmond. There are apothecaries to all the asylums except the Armagh Asylum.

340. How often does the apothecary attend?—He attends every day the physician goes to the asylum; three times a week where the number of patients is under 250, and every day if the number of patients is over 250, and oftener if necessary.

341. Is his attendance confined to the period of the physician's visit?—No, it is not; but it is understood that he should always come with or immediately after the visiting physician.

342. Has the resident manager any power of requiring his attendance at any time?—He has, at all times; and I have often known the apothecary sent for to bleed.

343. By whom are the medicines for the institution supplied? I think, generally, by druggists from Dublin. I believe there are one or two institutions, but I cannot remember them now, the medicines for which are supplied from the towns adjoining.

344. The medicines are purchased by the Governors for the use of the asylums?—Yes, for the use of the asylums, and are brought into the general account.

345. What are the duties of the apothecary when he attends?—The duty of the apothecary upon his attending is, to get the physician's prescribing book, and to make up the prescriptions which are ordered, and also, if patients are to be bled, he is to bleed them; the general duties of an apothecary, he is bound to perform—such as bleeding, blistering, and injections.

346. What is the course of proceeding in surgical cases, or when the attendance of a surgeon is required in the asylums?—Generally, the visiting physician performs the duty; the visiting physicians are generally both surgeons and physicians.

Surgical attendance and treatment of patients.

347. In cases where the visiting physician is not a surgeon, what steps would be taken for securing the attendance of a surgeon, or are any steps taken?—In the case of the Armagh Asylum, for instance, where there is a non-medical manager, and a physician attending, I think if a surgical case occurred there a surgeon should be sent for; but in all new asylums where there are resident physicians now, they are generally surgeons also, and perform the duty.

348. Is that qualification required for holding the appointment?—It is not; but in selecting and choosing men, we generally wish them, in any event, to have a surgical degree, in order that they may combine the discharge of both duties.

349. Are any arrangements made with reference to the attendance of a surgeon in cases where the visiting physician may not have the qualification of a surgeon?—In Belfast and Cork such an arrangement is entered into. The apothecary in Belfast is a surgeon, and he performs the duty both of apothecary and surgeon. In Cork there is a regular surgeon attending the asylum there; he goes up every day to it; and there is also an apothecary, but not a resident one, in the Cork asylum. There is a resident physician, but no visiting physician. The resident physician is the physician of the establishment.

350. Is the resident physician you speak of in that case the manager of the asylum?—He is. That is a very special case.

351. What are the arrangements with regard to the other asylums?—With respect to Limerick, which is a large asylum, of 300 patients, there is a medical manager who is a surgeon. The resident medical manager is a surgeon as well as a physician, and there is a visiting physician and a non-resident apothecary attached to the asylum. Any surgical duties to be performed are performed, if necessary, by the resident medical officer. There is no other institution having regular surgeons visiting.

352. What are the arrangements in those asylums where there is no visiting surgeon, and where the manager has no surgical degree?—I am not now aware of any physician who is resident not having a surgical degree; except in the case that I mentioned, they have surgical degrees, and there is no necessity for any surgeon attending, as the resident medical man generally has that degree.

353. In the case that you have mentioned, the manager being a surgeon, and strictly speaking having no duties of a medical or surgical character to discharge, under the regulations, is he competent to perform any surgical operation of his own authority?—No; not of his own authority; he must, of course, have the concurrence of the visiting physician.

354. Then, in the case of such operation becoming necessary, or in a case requiring the attendance of a surgeon, he can only act when called upon by the visiting physician?—Yes.

355. How does that system work, under which the resident manager may be called upon by the visiting physician to deal with the surgical treatment of the patients?—I will give you a case. In the Mullingar Asylum we have a resident physician, and the visiting physician is a surgeon—

Deputy.

*Inspector of Lunatic Asylums—General
State of Asylums and Lunacy.*

Francis White, Esq.,
F.R.C.S.L.
Visiting Physician;
Cork Asylum.

356. That is a case opposite to what we ask about; we want information respecting the cases where the manager is a surgeon?—There is nothing so common as consulting a surgeon in a surgical case. There is no want of proper surgical assistance; independently of any other aid, they are perfectly competent in the asylums.

357. You have stated that, in the case of the Cork Asylum, there is no visiting physician?—I have.

358. Has not the want of a visiting physician to that large institution been felt?—We have often considered that. I do not think it has, strictly speaking, for the resident manager is a very competent physician. He has a competent clerk in the office, and the clerk and general steward of the place do a good deal of the business of the house, which lessens his labour as manager, and leaves him free to attend to the patients. At the same time, I think myself, considering the extent of the asylum, that a visiting physician ought not to be dispensed with.

359. In point of fact, the resident manager, though a physician, is not bound to discharge the duties of a physician under the rules?—It was understood, since he was appointed, that he should; and the Inspectors have laid down rules and regulations for the medical manager in the absence of a visiting physician.

360. In this case of Cork, where there is no visiting physician, there is no person who, by law, is bound to discharge those duties which the Privy Council have assigned to the visiting physician?—No.

361. Therefore there is no person who is bound to attend, daily, cases of fever?—No; except the surgeon, who is also a physician.

362. Would you not consider it essential that there should be a physician, whose duty it would be to visit in cases of fever?—I think it would make the medical staff more complete in a large institution.

363. Do you consider the appointment of a mere surgeon as visiting medical attendant of an asylum, a sufficient compliance with the rules, which require a physician to be appointed to each asylum?—No.

364. Why has Cork been made an exception to the general rule in this respect?—This requires an explanation. Cork has been only within the last few years made a district asylum. It was originally an asylum for Cork alone, and a very bad one. It was recommended to change the thing altogether, and to build a new asylum, and on the eve of building it the Lord Lieutenant formed it into a district asylum. The officers now attached to it were in the former asylum. Dr. Power, who was the visiting physician of the institution before it became a district asylum; Mr. Hobert, the visiting surgeon; and the apothecary—the three men who, before it was constituted a district asylum, were the medical officers. The manager died immediately on going to the new asylum, and Dr. Power, the visiting physician, applied to be appointed to the office of resident manager in place of the deceased man. He was appointed, and the system of the medical staff has not been changed since.

365. Was that transfer of Dr. Power from the office of visiting physician to the office of resident manager duly made by the Lord Lieutenant?—Duly made by the Lord Lieutenant.

366. With reference to the further details of your inspection, have you found that divine service has been regularly performed in each of the asylums?—Yes, in all the asylums, except in those of Belfast and Armagh.

367. Has divine service, according to the respective rites of the churches to which the inmates belong, been celebrated in each of the asylums?—Yes, with the exceptions I have named.

368. Has that omission always existed in the asylums to which you refer?—It has.

369. I believe Armagh Asylum has been in operation very many years?—It is the oldest of all the asylums; it was built in 1825. It was the first district asylum built in Ireland.

370. Have you noticed this omission in your reports?—We have.

371. Have you made representations, directly or indirectly, to the Board of Governors of the Armagh Asylum as to the omission of the celebration of divine service?—Yes.

372. With what effect?—With the effect that the representations were not received favourably at the time that I first suggested the propriety of having divine service. The Protestant Primate, Lord Beresford, was in the chair on the occasion, and he appeared to be very favourable to the proposition, and so much so, that he has within the last two years, as I understand, paid his own chaplain to attend the inmates who are of the Protestant religion.

373. Has the Lord Lieutenant ever appointed a chaplain, of any persuasion, for that asylum?—No, we kept it in abeyance in consequence of the Belfast case.

374. Does the chaplain paid by the Primate for attending the asylum celebrate divine service?—I believe not. He merely attends to give religious instruction, and see the members of his own community there; but I am not aware, at this moment, of divine service being performed by him in the asylum.

375. Is any part of the building in Armagh allocated for a chapel?—No.

376. Do clergymen of the Roman Catholic or Presbyterian persuasions regularly attend the asylum, although not paid?—No, they do not attend unless sent for. It is understood that Catholic priests and Presbyterian clergymen of the district are free to go in to see any of their community; but they generally do not go unless they are sent for.

377. Then are there any particular religious duties performed in that establishment on the Sabbath day?—I am not aware that, in Armagh, there are.

*Religious ministrations
Armagh Asylum.*

378. You have referred to the Belfast case. What proceedings have been taken with a view to the appointment of chaplains for the Belfast Asylum?—The Inspectors felt it their duty first to recommend the Board that they should recommend to the Lord Lieutenant the appointment of chaplains, as in Londonderry, and in all the other asylums, except that of Armagh, which was then under consideration. We proposed that at the Board, and had a correspondence with the Governors upon the subject, and we found them so adverse to our recommendation that we did not stir in the matter for two years. We see still the necessity that exists for having chaplains, and we have received various private communications from some of the Governors and officers of asylums, representing that there was very great uneasiness with respect to persons in bad health—that, in fact, in some cases, inmates had died without a clergyman being sent for. I can state that, on my inspection, many patients came up to me and said it was a great hardship that they never saw a clergyman since they entered the asylum. These circumstances impressed themselves so strongly on my mind, and on that of my colleagues, that we urged the Government to appoint chaplains. We consulted with the Protestant Bishop of Down and Connor and with the Roman Catholic bishop on the subject. I should say what I am stating now occurred some five or six years ago. We then represented that we thought it necessary to have chaplains appointed. Between three and four years ago an enlargement was made in the Belfast asylum, and in the plan sent in to the Board was included a chapel for divine service, at which the Board on their meeting took alarm. The plans had been sent down to them, and upon seeing this, they at once protested against having a chapel erected. They remonstrated strongly, and entered into a resolution on the subject, which they sent up to Dublin, and correspondence took place. Concurrently with this, the Lord Lieutenant appointed three chaplains, on the recommendation of the Inspectors, upon the grounds I have previously stated. These appointments, and the plan for the chapel, as I have said, excited their opposition. They again met and protested strongly against the proceeding, and they memorialized the Lord Lieutenant to beg that he would receive a deputation from them on the subject. A deputation came up from the Board and was received. The chaplains were appointed by the then Lord Lieutenant, the Earl of Clarendon, and the Governors resisted their admission to the asylum. When Lord Clarendon left this country, and Lord Eglinton arrived, the Governors immediately memorialized him, and sought an interview, which was granted. Four or five of the Governors attended on the occasion of the interview. Lord Eglinton consulted the two Inspectors, learned their opinions, and heard the case on both sides; the result was, that he was of the same opinion as Lord Clarendon, and ratified the appointment of the chaplains. Notwithstanding this, the Governors gave directions to the resident manager, who is a medical man, not to admit the chaplains for the purpose of celebrating divine service; but that he might admit them if they were required in an urgent case. And so the question stood over in that state until another Lord Lieutenant came, the Earl of St. Germans; he was a very short time here when the Governors adopted a similar course to that they had taken with previous viceroys, and they memorialized him to grant an interview. The deputation came up to Dublin, and Lord St. Germans sent for the Inspectors; the deputation from the Governors and the Inspectors met in the presence of his Excellency. The Governors stated their case against the appointment of chaplains, and the Inspectors supported their view in favour of the appointment. His Excellency heard the statements of both parties with very great patience. I think we were three hours discussing it before we left; and the result was that he, also, came to the same conclusion as his predecessors had arrived at. We were pressing the matter with respect to the chaplains, and then the question arose whether the Lord Lieutenant had power to appoint them at all. The Governors refused paying the chaplains, who were not allowed to perform divine service. The three chaplains—the Protestant, Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic—were ordered to be paid £60 a year each. They were not allowed to officiate. They applied for their salaries, and the Board said they would not pay them. When they were urged to permit the chaplains to perform divine service in the asylum, they consulted legal gentlemen, and were advised to resist the appointments, and to state that the Lord Lieutenant had no power to make them at all. The question was argued, and after considerable litigation, it was ultimately referred to the Court of Queen's Bench; the result of their decision is, that the chaplains appointed to the Belfast Asylum are not acting.

379. I believe the Lord Lieutenant in Council has sanctioned rules relative to the duties of chaplains?—Yes.

380. Those duties cannot, of course, be performed in the Belfast Asylum in consequence of what you have stated?—No.

381. In the Belfast Asylum do any clergymen attend voluntarily to perform divine service?—No. I should say they offered themselves and were refused. The Catholic clergymen performed divine service for some time, and was afterwards refused admission to do so.

382. Is there any religious prayer, that you are aware of, read for the inmates on the Sabbath in that asylum?—Whether the prayers are read now, I am not aware; I have not inspected it lately; my colleague has. But the manager, I can state, was in the habit of reading prayers indiscriminately for such of the inmates as were capable of appreciating or understanding him; and he read prayers constantly—if not daily, certainly on the Sabbath day—to such persons; his wife also did the same for the females. The resident physician's wife is matron. I should state that the manager, as medical man, and his wife, as matron of the institution, were all through against the introduction of chaplains into it.

383. What is your own opinion as to the importance, or otherwise, of having chaplains attached to the district asylums?—I have no hesitation in stating that I think it is one of the links in the chain of curative measures; it is most important according to my experience.

384. Are there not many inmates who at times, although labouring under insanity in some respects, are fully capable of appreciating religious instruction?—There are some fully capable of appreciating it.

385. Are the inmates of the Belfast Asylum supplied with any books of devotion or other pious works?—I am aware that several have Prayer-books and Bibles in the asylum.

386. Are you aware whether these books were selected for their use by the Governors or manager, or whether they were furnished by the friends of the inmates or brought by the parties themselves into the institution?—My impression is, that they are not furnished by the Board or the manager. I cannot be positive as to the books; the manager may supply them, but there is no general rule there for supplying them as there is in other asylums.

387. With the two exceptions of Armagh and Belfast, there are chaplains to all the other asylums?—There are.

388. Are you enabled to state whether the existence of such officers has been of advantage or otherwise to the institutions and the inmates?—I consider a great advantage.

389. I believe there were other asylums besides Armagh and Belfast which, until the last few years, had not chaplains?—Yes.

390. Would you state those asylums?—Clongmel, Londonderry, Carlow, and Limerick, but they have had them some years now; at first they had not.

391. In the case of Londonderry or of Clongmel, or the other asylums to which you have referred, did the Governors resist the appointment of chaplains?—In Derry and Clongmel they did; at first they did so in Derry, and it is very singular that Dr. Rogan, the physician, was against their appointment. They, however, ultimately appointed three chaplains, Presbyterian, Protestant, and Catholic; and I can refer to a letter from Dr. Rogan, after a lapse of two or three years, during which time the clergy had carried on their ministrations, in which he expresses his high approval of the result, states that they are working well, and ever since we have had testimonies from the manager and officers of the beneficial results of the appointments.

392. Was that the case in Clongmel likewise?—It was. In Clongmel we met with some opposition from the Board; ultimately they agreed, and we got the chaplains appointed. Since that time we have been working very well together; but this Belfast case has renewed the question, and some members adverse to having chaplains in the institution have refused to pay the chaplains in the last half year.

393. What is usually paid to the chaplains of these institutions?—Except in Richmond, where they have £100, and in others £80 a-year, I think, in the rest, £50 a-year is the largest salary, and £25 a-year the minimum.

394. What proportion of the inmates of the asylums usually attend divine worship?—We generally order a return from the chaplains of the number attending, and I would say that certainly more or very nearly one-half of the inmates in the asylums attend.

395. And are capable of benefiting by such attendance?—Fully capable; so much so, that there are many of the Catholic inmates returned as receiving communion, and the statements respecting them are highly gratifying. The patients look forward with great anxiety to the Sabbath day for the divine service.

396. I think you stated that at times where there are no chaplains, the inmates have complained of not receiving religious ministrations?—They have.

397. Have these complaints been frequent?—Latterly they have ceased, but I remember that in Belfast, Derry, and Armagh there were complaints of the kind, and I think that before the appointment of chaplains in one or two of the other asylums similar complaints were made.

398. In cases where there are no chaplains, do the inmates attend any places of worship outside the asylum?—Very few are brought out. There was a proposal made, in one or two of the asylums, to take out a certain number every Sunday, but there was an objection against taking out any.

399. Does your answer apply to the asylums in Belfast and Armagh?—I am not now prepared to say whether they are brought out from these asylums.

400. Is there any regulation in the Belfast Asylum which would prevent their going out if they required to be taken out?—There is no direct rule. I should state that the visiting physician, Dr. McCormack, who is adverse to having chaplains, proposed that a certain number should be brought out every Sunday to prayers. This was objected to, as bringing them through the town would involve too much excitement for them. On one occasion that I was at the Board I objected to this, and it was objected to by all the members of the Board and the officers of the asylum.

401. You stated that there were three chaplains appointed to the Belfast Asylum, that arrangement arose from the necessity of providing for Presbyterian, Protestant, and Roman Catholic inmates?—Certainly.

402. Are the numbers professing these respective religions considerable in the asylum?—They are about equal. I should say that there are Presbyterian ministers members of the Board, who are the heads of three divisions of the Presbyterian body; and they felt great jealousy, in the first instance, with the exception of Dr. Edgar, at the appointment of only one Presbyterian clergyman. They said, if you appoint one Presbyterian chaplain, you must appoint two more, for we here represent two more divisions of that community; there are Moravians here. In fact, they made out that there should be seven chaplains, and that was one of their arguments for not having chaplains at all.

403. On your inspection of the asylums, do you ascertain whether any system of coercion is in practice therein, and the results of it?—We do. The only system of coercion practised is that of the strait waistcoat, muffs, and straps.

404. Where such system of coercion exists, what have you found to be the result?—There is a variety of opinions on that point; generally speaking, neither strait waistcoat, muffs, nor straps are used.

405. Where a system of non-coercion exists, what have you found to be the result?—I found the result of that to be very successful and very satisfactory.

406. Have you found that the system of classification or non-classification of patients prevails in the asylums generally?—It prevails to a certain extent—in some asylums more than others. It is very desirable to have minute classification, if the structure and arrangements of the asylums permit of it. In some cases they do not permit of it to that extent.

407. What is the general nature of the classification where it prevails?—The general nature of the classification is—first, acute cases on admission; the next is the convalescent and tranquil class; the third is the refractory and dangerous class. Also, in some asylums, where epilepsy is more prevalent than in others, there is an epileptic class—epilepsy of all degrees, and the same classification is on the female as well as on the male side.

408. Is there a classification prevailing in any asylum under which idiots or imbeciles are kept distinctly apart?—Yes, in one or two asylums; we cannot well do it generally.

409. Would you consider such a separation desirable?—Most desirable; and wherever it can be effected we recommend it.

410. State what classes you comprise under the head of imbeciles?—There are two classes—congenital idiots, and those who become idiots from chronic diseases. We cannot classify them so minutely as that; they are put together; for instance, an idiot boy, we are obliged to keep in the adult ward. We attempt at times to put the epileptic and idiot class into the same ward. That is in consequence of our not having structural arrangements sufficient for classification.

411. Has the question of the appropriation of certain portions of the building for distinct classes ever been brought before the Lord Lieutenant in Council?—Yes it has.

412. On what occasion, and with what result?—I do not think there is any rule upon the point, but we have often brought the question under the consideration of the Governors; for instance, in building the new asylums; but I am not aware of any rule for classifying patients more than what suggests itself to the medical officers and inspectors.

413. Speaking of the asylums generally, what proportion of incurables would you say are at present in these asylums?—Why, I think two-thirds might be put down as incurable, and I think that it is a very remarkable fact, where there are so many epileptic, idiot, and incurable cases, that fifty-five per cent of the cases on the whole are capable of employment.

414. Is the number of incurables in the asylums gradually augmenting?—Yes; the proportion is not the same as it was some years ago, inasmuch as, by the great facilities latterly afforded by the erection of new asylums, we are getting in a great many had cases.

415. That has been the natural result of the increase of the number of the asylums?—Yes.

416. What is the practice of the Boards generally, with reference to the discharge or otherwise of incurable cases?—They often make an effort to get rid of incurable cases; and we may direct the manager to write to the families of the parties, or their friends, and to try and have them taken away by them, with the view of making room for recent cases. We have done that repeatedly, and have freed the asylums partially of such cases; but, generally, they are left upon the asylum, and there are many incurable cases, old chronic cases, that cannot be sent away. There is no one belonging to them, and it would be cruel, in fact, to send them out, though they are perfectly harmless. In some instances we do it in order to throw them upon the poorhouses; and there is so much unwillingness on the part of the poorhouse people to receive them, that they are sent back; but this I will say, that several of what are called incurable cases are most profitably employed in the asylums.

417. In the case of dangerous lunatics, who may be incurable, have you found usually the result, that after they have been discharged they again come back to the asylums, in consequence of committal by magistrates?—Incurable dangerous lunatics would not be discharged.

418. Is insanity on the increase generally in Ireland?—We find that it is on the increase; for instance, I could show you that, within the last year and a-half, there has been an increase of 496 cases in the asylums under our charge.

419. I am talking of the increase of insanity in Ireland, without reference to asylums?—In my opinion, insanity is on the increase. I may mention that there is an increase of nearly 500 in the cases that came under our inspection.

420. You consider, therefore, that there exists a necessity for increased lunatic accommodation?—I have no hesitation in saying there is a necessity; and, as a proof of that, I will mention, that the Richmond Lunatic Asylum and the new one attached to it now contain 614 patients, and I think there are not more than twenty vacancies.

421. Are the asylums in Ireland generally full?—They are, with the exception of two or three new ones; for instance, Omagh is not full; Mullingar, Sligo, and Killarney Asylums are not full.

Inspector of Lunatic Asylums—General Stoke of Dublin and Leinster.
Francis White, Esq.,
M.P. for Dublin
Lunatics in workhouses and at large.

422. Are we to understand, therefore, that the lunatic poor of these respective districts are entirely provided for?—No; there are very many at large and in the poorhouses.

423. Have any steps been taken for the removal of those lunatics who are in the poorhouses to the asylums of their respective districts?—No, except those that are dangerous, or such cases that cannot be managed in the poorhouses, and they are removed.

424. Why have no steps been taken?—No steps have been taken in consequence of their numbers; they would fill up the asylums to the exclusion of acute cases.

425. Are not the lunatic asylums the proper places of detention for the lunatic poor of the districts, whether they be dangerous, unmanageable, or otherwise?—Certainly.

426. Do you consider the workhouses suitable places of detention for lunatics, although they may not be curable?—I do not; they have neither apartments nor appliances for such classes of persons in the poorhouses. The apartments are very indifferent, in fact there is no comfort for them at all.

427. Have you any returns which would show the number of lunatics for whom additional accommodation is required for the several districts in Ireland?—I can furnish the Commissioners with the returns of the lunatics in the poorhouses of Ireland down to a very late date, and I can furnish them also with the number of wandering lunatics not confined in any place, and who ought to be confined in asylums; and I would now say that the wandering class amounts to over 7,000 persons, and that the poorhouses at present contain 2,000 lunatics.

Removal of Cases
from workhouses to Asylums.

428. In what way is the removal of recent cases from the workhouses to the asylums insured?—It is understood that there is generally an application from the poorhouse to the Governors to admit the patients into the asylum. That application is laid before the Board, who give an order for the transmission of the lunatic; and the attendant of the workhouse, if it is some distance off, comes with the party, or, if it is necessary, the attendant from the asylum is sent, and there is every care taken in the transmission.

Commitment to gaol.

429. Have the Poor Law Commissioners laid down any rules or regulations relative to the transmission of these lunatics from workhouses to asylums?—Not that I am aware of. There is one practice we find we have to contend with respecting the poorhouses, and that occurs when a lunatic, who may be enraged by the other paupers in the place, becomes outrageous, and breaks windows, or commits similar violence. The objectionable course is adopted in some of the poorhouses, of the master, or the nurse, or whoever witnessed this ebullition, going before a magistrate to have the party committed as a dangerous lunatic, and sent to gaol.

430. Is there any duty resting upon any officer of a workhouse to take measures for the removal of lunatics from it to an asylum?—Not that I am aware of. We have written repeatedly as to the practice of committing these poor creatures as dangerous lunatics to gaol.

houses.

431. Do you and your colleague visit annually each of the workhouses in Ireland?—I think, generally speaking, we do. I will not say we inspect all; but we do inspect those which contain bad cases, or that are crowded; we invariably visit those.

432. Are you aware that any patients are refused admission into district asylums from the want of room?—Certainly.

433. Are there cases of lunatic poor kept in detention in workhouses or gaols?—Yes; for instance in Carlow, Londonderry, Clonmel, and Maryborough.

Additional accom-
poor.

434. How do you propose that the necessary accommodation for the lunatic poor of Ireland should be provided?—I have considered that question very much, and in our last Report we recommended that additional buildings be attached or erected near the existing asylums of a plain kind; one story to consist of dormitories for the accommodation of the additional number in the district, these we intended for the incurable, the filthy, epileptic, and idiot class. We considered that an arrangement of that kind, in such of the districts where they are pressed for room—for instance, in Carlow, Clonmel, Londonderry, and Maryborough—would be advisable. We recommended, as I have stated, additional buildings to be attached to the asylums, to be of a plain description, and to go a good deal at the rear of the existing ones, or detached if they cannot be connected with them. I think that would be a very excellent arrangement for providing for an additional number of lunatics in these districts, and would enable you to have existing asylums appropriated more for curative purposes, as the chronic and incurable cases should be removed to the additional buildings. This, I think, would be a far more beneficial measure than what has been proposed twice in Parliament; first in 1804, and next by a Select Committee of the House of Lords in 1843—namely, to erect four provincial asylums for the chronic incurable cases. That was proposed, and was very feasible in appearance; but there was such a contrariety of opinion between grand juries, boards of governors, and other parties, as to the propriety of it, that we found it impossible to follow it up, and it was from that the proposal emanated for the erecting new district asylums and extending some others. We thought that would meet a good deal of the exigencies or wants of districts, but we did not hold in view that the lunatics of the poorhouses should be provided for by that increased accommodation; we looked forward to future arrangements for that; and now having found out that there is a great number unprovided for in all the districts, particularly in those I have mentioned, we do propose the erection of such additions as I have described.

435. Do you consider that there are any districts in Ireland which are at present of such extent that it would be desirable to establish more asylums and form new districts?—I think so.

436. State these districts?—I think that two asylums in the province of Connaught are not sufficient for it; and, as you will see in one of the Reports, I originally pointed out the necessity of having an asylum either at Ballina or at Castlebar. Having looked more minutely into it, I now think an asylum would be necessary in Castlebar. I find that, if there was another asylum there to-morrow, there would be 150 cases ready to go into it, there are 77 cases, for instance, from the county Mayo in the Ballinasloe Asylum, and these, with the lunatics in the poorhouses and the gaols, would make up the number I have stated.

437. Is the Ballinasloe Asylum now full?—It is not quite full; there are, I suppose, thirty or forty vacancies yet.

438. With this number of lunatic poor unprovided for, how does it happen that there are forty vacancies in the Ballinasloe Asylum?—Because no steps have been taken to remove the lunatics from the poorhouses.

439. Are we to understand, therefore, there are not lunatic wandering poor who ought to be admitted to these vacant beds?—There are, certainly. There are at present in the Ballinasloe Asylum 303 patients, and it is capable of accommodating 340. No applications are made, or there may be applications on the books for the next Board meeting. There is no asylum in Ireland into which patients are so freely admitted.

440. Are you of opinion that the great distance of the county Mayo from the asylum prevents other applications being made for admission from that county?—I am.

441. Is there an indisposition on the part of the poorer classes to send their lunatic friends or relations to an asylum?—I do not think there is, except with the very harmless and idiot class; they are generally favoured by the poor, who keep them at home; but any violent or bad case of lunacy, they are most anxious to send to an asylum; in fact, I would say, generally, they feel no reluctance in sending them.

442. Do you suppose there are not lunatic poor within the districts immediately adjoining Ballinasloe, who might be placed in the asylum, and who yet have not applied for admission?—I think it is very possible.

443. Do you think there ought to be an alteration in the law with reference to the removal of lunatics or idiots of the poorer classes to the asylums?—I think at present the law works very well. Whenever friends wish to have a lunatic put into an asylum, if there is a vacancy, they apply, and he is admitted.

444. Has the Ballinasloe Asylum been full since the opening of the Sligo Asylum?—No.

445. Has the number you have stated—namely, from thirty to forty vacancies—been the average number of vacancies since that period?—I think there have been more vacancies.

446. Are we to understand that there are no cases in the poorhouses of Mayo, Galway, or Roscommon, which might properly be removed to the asylum?—There are cases.

447. If there were a lunatic asylum established at Castlebar, or any other place in the county Mayo, do you think the lunatic poor in the county, now not in an asylum, would be sent to it?—I do.

448. Do you think the erection of such an asylum would immediately lead to a still greater reduction in the number in the Ballinasloe Asylum?—Certainly; there are seventy-seven cases from the county Mayo in that asylum, and the transferring of that number to another asylum, would reduce the number in the Ballinasloe Asylum considerably, and such an arrangement would meet the exigencies of Connaught altogether.

449. When was the Sligo asylum opened?—About two years since.

450. Have you since felt it your duty to inspect the workhouses and gaols in the counties of Galway, Mayo, and Roscommon, with a view to the removal of lunatics to the Ballinasloe Asylum?—We have.

451. And have all the lunatics in these workhouses and gaols, that you considered proper cases for admission, been removed to the Ballinasloe Asylum?—Not all; those in the gaols have been removed to Ballinasloe, but there is not a day in the week passes by that there are not fresh cases. At the time we took particular care in having the gaol cases down to that time removed, but we have not done so with respect to those in the poorhouses.

452. Does the existence of a considerable number of vacancies in the Ballinasloe Asylum prove that the insane poor of that district are properly provided for?—I am certain that there are several, if application was made for them, would be admitted, and would be fit cases. It certainly does not prove that they are fully provided for.

453. Has a magistrate any power under the existing law to send a wandering lunatic to an asylum, who has not been committed as a dangerous lunatic?—No.

454. I believe you recommended, some years since, that three asylums should be erected in the province of Connaught?—I did.

455. On that occasion it was determined only to erect one additional asylum?—Yes.

456. Have you since recommended that your original proposition should be carried out?—I have not.

457. Will you state the circumstances as connected with the wants of the Carlow district?—We considered that the Carlow Asylum required enlargement in consequence of the great pressure of cases for admission, and there have been repeated remonstrances from the county of Wexford (which forms one of the counties of the district), as to the impossibility of getting cases into the Carlow Asylum. Of late the Grand Jury and the leading gentry of that county have memorialised the Lord Lieutenant to allow them to have an asylum erected in their own county, and the prayer of their memorial was under consideration; but in consequence of the Commissioners sent over to inquire into matters connected with the Board of Works and the new asylums that have been erected, and, in consequence of this new Commission now sitting, the thing lies in abeyance until it is known what proposition will emanate from this Commission.

458. Do you mean that the Privy Council have made an order for the establishment of an additional asylum?—I am not aware they actually made an order.

459. Is the Carlow Asylum at present quite full?—It is.

460. Have you recently inspected the workhouses and gaols in the counties of Kildare, Carlow, and Wexford?—I have not done so with respect to Wexford. I have inspected those in Carlow and Kildare. Dr. Nugent has inspected in the county Wexford, and some in Kildare and Carlow. Jointly we have inspected them in the three counties.

461. Has the result of this inspection shown, that there are many cases in the workhouses and gaols fit for admission to the lunatic asylum?—I consider so. I should state, that in the gaols of Carlow and Kildare there are not lunatics, but in those of Wexford there are several.

462. Do you consider that the additional accommodation should be provided for by the establishment of a district asylum or the enlargement of the asylum at Carlow?—I think it would be preferable to have a separate asylum rather than an enlargement to the Carlow Asylum. I am certain Wexford would require a separate asylum as much as Kilkenny.

463. What is the accommodation of the Carlow Asylum?—There are 198 patients at this moment in Carlow Asylum?—I think that is too much; it is crowded.

464. Has your opinion as to the necessity of an additional asylum for Wexford been at all influenced by the distance of the county from Carlow?—Yes, and by the fact that lunacy is more prevalent in that county than in any other.

465. Do you consider that the additional accommodation required in the Carlow district could be suitably provided by the addition of a cheaper building, to which you have referred, in connexion with that asylum?—I think it could. By the extension of the Carlow Asylum you could accommodate the Wexford cases.

466. For how many would you propose that the new asylum in Wexford should be built?—I would build no new asylum for less than 200; and as I have stated in former reports, I would have it built so as to admit of extension for the accommodation of fifty or 100 more.

Londonderry District.

467. Is there any other district where the number of lunatic poor are unprovided for, which seems to you to call for additional accommodation?—There is Donegal, in the Londonderry district.

468. Is Londonderry Asylum at present full?—It is.

469. What arrangements would you propose in that district with a view to provide the required additional accommodation?—I would propose either an extension of the building in the way I have alluded to in connexion with the Londonderry Asylum, or the erection of a separate asylum in Donegal, which has been applied for by half the Grand Jury, the other half dissenting.

470. Which of the two plans would you consider, under all the circumstances of the case, the more desirable to be adopted?—I think a separate asylum the more desirable.

Clongmel District.

471. Is there any other district, the accommodation in which is insufficient for the lunatic poor?—Clongmel.

472. Clongmel is the asylum for the whole county of Tipperary?—Yes.

473. In what manner would you propose that additional accommodation should be provided in this district?—I would propose the extension of the Clongmel Asylum. The county is divided into two ridings, the north and south. It would be more convenient and better, I know, though more expensive, to have another asylum at Nenagh; but on the score of economy, I would say the extension of the Clongmel Asylum, as we proposed in our report, would meet the exigencies of the county.

474. Is the construction and position of the Clongmel Asylum such as would admit of the accommodation being provided in the manner you proposed?—I think it would admit of the additional accommodation being provided.

475. Is any additional accommodation required for the Dublin district?—Yes, I would propose the erection of an asylum for the chronic, incurable cases, to include epileptic imbeciles, and idiots, in the neighbourhood of Dublin, for all classes belonging to the district. The building to be erected in a cheap form, something similar to what we have described in our report, and to consist principally of dormitories with a few single apartments. I consider that the wants of the district of Dublin require such an institution as this, in order to give facilities for the curing of acute cases in the new Richmond institution.

476. Would you propose that this new asylum should be in immediate contiguity to the existing asylum?—It might be.

477. Such buildings as you refer to, if not in immediate contiguity with other asylums, should consist of a greater number of apartments than you have specified, namely, dormitories alone?—Of course, there must be the other offices in connexion with an asylum.

478. So far as regards the amount of accommodation to be provided in such a building when separate from an existing asylum, would it not require all that is now necessary in an asylum?—All the offices would be required.

479. The economy of such a building would materially depend upon the construction?—Yes, the economy of erection.

480. Supposing the building not to be in immediate contiguity with the existing asylum, would not an additional and distinct staff of officers be required?—Certainly.

481. Do you believe that the cost of the maintenance of patients of the classes to which you refer in such an asylum, would be greater or less than in the existing asylum?—Well, I think it would be less; but let me not be misunderstood as wishing to curtail the dietary of that class who, I think, ought to be fed just as well as the others; but there are medical extras, and other things, that they do not require, as in acute cases. I think, on the whole, they might be provided for more economically than the acute cases, with fewer attendants.

482. Are you enabled to state whether the charges for the establishment are kept separate from the charges for maintenance in the accounts of each asylum?—They are.

483. In charging the counties for maintenance, is a county charged a proportion of the costs of the establishment, whether there be lunatics from it or not in the asylum?—No, the county cannot be charged unless there are patients from it.

484. Can you state, generally, whether you consider the dietary given in these asylums is adequate?—In some asylums I think the dietary comes up to the proper scale.

485. You have no power, as Inspector, in controlling that?—No.

486. Or in any other matter connected with the discharge of the duties of the other Governors?—No direct control.

487. Does the cost of the dietary of patients vary in the different asylums?—Yes; that may be from local circumstances, and also from the scale of dietary being higher in some districts than in others.

488. What is your opinion as to the manner in which the patients, generally, are clad?—Well, I think generally they are warmly and comfortably clad, but they are too often allowed to wear out their clothing. In that matter, there is a kind of over economy on the part of Managers and Governors. I would wish to see the inmates better clad.

489. Do you consider the bedding and furniture sufficiently good?—I think generally they are; there are some exceptions I do not approve of. There are some beds and bedsteads in our asylums that are very uncomfortable, badly made and selected.

490. I believe you have no control over these matters?—No immediate control over these matters, except that we suggest sometimes the bed and bedding might be of a better description generally.

491. Are the wages given to attendants, in your opinion, generally sufficient to secure the services of competent servants?—I think not.

492. The accounts for the maintenance of asylums are forwarded to your office?—They are, and undergo a very strict investigation.

493. Are you furnished with sufficient returns from the asylums of the numbers of inmates, &c., to enable you efficiently to check these accounts?—We are furnished with a return of the numbers—so many patients and so many servants—and then an estimate is regularly formed.

494. Practically, are the estimates furnished by the Governors reduced after inspection by you?—No, they are not. We often find errors in them, and we correct them, and send the accounts back, and we send them down as corrected to the Privy Council to be passed.

495. Have you ever objected to distinct items in the accounts?—We have, from time to time.

496. Have the Privy Council acted on your suggestions, as regards the reduction of the estimates, accordingly?—Always.

497. Amongst the institutions which you annually inspect, is a portion of the House of Industry in the city of Dublin, where lunatics are detained, called the Hardwicke cells?—Yes.

498. Do you exercise the same inspection over that establishment as over the ordinary district asylums?—We always inspect it, and any thing that is wrong we set right, yet it is directly under the Poor Law authorities.

499. Are entries made in any books kept in the institution of the result of your visits?—I visit so frequently, that I do not always make minutes, but I often do make them, and have done so within the last week.

500. To whom do you make representations of any circumstance you may find deserving of notice in this institution?—To the Poor Law Commissioners.

501. Am I to understand that copies of your entries are sent to the Poor Law Commissioners?—Yes, by the Inspector. Minutes as to any thing we find fault with, we always send.

502. Are the cases at present detained in the Hardwicke cells cases of recent admission, or are they old cases?—They are old cases.

503. Has that arisen from the law not permitting fresh admissions to the House of Industry Lunatic Institution?—Yes.

504. Who has immediate authority on the spot over this institution?—The Governor of the House of Industry, Dr. Stewart.

505. Have you found a readiness on his part to attend to any representations you have made with reference to the inmates of the Hardwicke cells?—I have.

506. Are you satisfied, generally, with the condition of that establishment?—No.

507. Would you think it advisable that these lunatics should be transferred to a more suitable asylum?—I do; and that is the reason why I have in contemplation what I told you about the new building for such a class.

508. Are you aware whether it is the duty of any medical man to visit the Hardwicke cells?—Yes.

509. Are you aware how often these visits are made?—I inquired, and found they need not to be made so often as I should wish; they are not made as frequently as I would wish.

510. Is there any rule obliging the medical attendant to visit the Hardwicke cells

- periodically, and if so, at what intervals?—Well, I am not aware of any rule of the kind. The Hardwicke cells, though we inspect them, do not come so immediately under our observation as the district asylums; there is a doctor specially appointed to attend the cells as well as other parts of this institution; but I remarked the inmates were not visited as often as I wished.
511. Has the cannibalism that recently existed at Island Bridge, for the detention of lunatics, been closed?—Yes.
512. How have the lunatics who were detained there been disposed of?—Those that belonged to the Dublin district were sent to the Richmond Asylum, and such as were from the old House of Industry were sent to the Hardwicke cells.
513. You have hitherto spoken of the district asylums. Your inspection of private asylums is made under the provisions of the 5th and 6th Vics., cap. 123?—Yes.
514. Are you in the habit of visiting these asylums once in each year?—Twice, and oftener. My colleagues and myself pay these visits.
515. Do you make it a rule to visit every part of the house?—Yes.
516. Do you satisfy yourself that the provisions of the Act of Parliament, as regards the plan of the building being hung up, and as regards the proper orders and certificates for the admission of patients, and the other matters, are duly complied with?—I examine them; but I cannot say those provisions of the Act are duly complied with.
517. Do you make any entry on the occasion of these visits of the results of your inspection in the book kept for that purpose?—On these half-yearly visits we do; but there were occasions when we took away the book and entered in it what we thought right at our own office in consequence of the pressure of business.
518. On the first of these visits after the licensing period, do you satisfy yourself that the licence has been obtained by the proprietor?—We find some difficulties with respect to that. We find sometimes that they are not taken out after they are granted at first. The parties are bound to pay a fee to the Clerk of the Peace, and that officer heretofore used to be in the habit of giving them some time for the payment; and when we went to an asylum and did not find the licence in the hands of the proprietor, we would on our return require of the Clerk of the Peace to pay us the amount received for that licence, with a view of obliging the party to take it out.
519. Are you not aware that in such cases the licences have no avail until taken out?—I am.
520. Do you inquire whether divine service is performed in the institution, or any religious aid given to the patients?—We do.
521. And do you note in the minutes of your visits that such is the case?—Yes.
522. Have you much reason to complain on that ground?—Well, as to some asylums we have.
523. Have you inquired as to the amusements and occupations of the patients?—Yes.
524. Have you had occasion to pay many special visits to the private asylums within the last twelve months?—Yes; special visits.
525. Did you call in the aid of medical men on those occasions?—On five or six occasions.
526. Have you had occasion to pay night visits under the act to private asylums?—No.
527. Do you feel it your duty to make some memorandum in the inspection book of an asylum on the occasion of every visit?—No; not on the occasion of every visit; but almost on all the occasions of the half-yearly visits. There are also at times private entries made in the patients' book.
528. Do you think the law is sufficient at present with reference to the mode in which private asylums are licensed?—No; I would say it is defective.
529. In what respect?—In several respects. I think it is objectionable to leave it to magistrates.
530. That refers to the original licences?—Yes.
531. Are not copies of the minutes made by the Inspectors laid before the magistrates previous to any subsequent licence being granted?—They are, by the Clerk of the Peace.
532. In case of a licence being originally granted, what steps do the magistrates take to inform themselves of the suitability of the establishment, the character of the person applying, and the suitability of the accommodation?—Plans are laid before them, and also letters, if the party can get them, as to character, from respectable persons in the neighbourhood, generally from professional persons, and a map is laid before the magistrates, showing that there is accommodation for so many persons. The applicants often apply to the Inspectors to give them a letter as to character, and in some cases we did inspect and certify accordingly; but the Act does not require us to do any such thing.
533. There is no certificate required from the Inspectors as to the fitness of the establishment?—No, not prior to the granting of an original licence.
534. Is there any inquiry made by the magistrate as to the pecuniary means of the person who is applying for the licence to have such an establishment?—I am not aware that there is.
535. Are all the visits paid annually by each Inspector included in the returns made to us?—They are.
536. Are you and your colleague adequate to perform the duties of Inspectors, as required by the Acts now in force?—I think we are, with the qualification I already mentioned, in my evidence, in reference to an annual inspection of the entire of the poorhouses.
537. Have you any suggestion to make as to the amendment of the law in reference to district asylums?—Yes.

538. Would you and your colleague be so good as to furnish to this Commission such suggestions as you may wish to make with reference to the amendment of the law with regard to district asylums and private licensed asylums, and generally upon the subject of this inquiry?—Yes.

John Nugent, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

539. I believe you are, jointly with Dr. White, Inspector of Lunatic Asylums, under the 8th and 9th Vic., cap. 107?—Yes.

540. What control have the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums over the arrangements made with reference to the formation of districts and the erection of asylums?—They have no control as to the districts; they have the power of suggesting to Government, and Government has acted on their suggestions invariably.

541. Are the plans for lunatic asylums, or for additions thereto, submitted to the Inspectors previous to their being carried out?—The plans are submitted to the Inspectors, not with regard to the erection of the asylums, but with regard to the means of ventilation, so far as can be judged of on the ground plan, also with regard to the size of the corridors, the height of the dormitories. We have nothing whatever to do with carrying out the details. The ground plan is submitted to us specifying the certain number of square feet in each room, the certain height, breadth, and width for corridors, and other matters.

542. Does the law provide that the asylums, when erected, shall be visited by the Inspectors, and certified by them to be fit for occupation previous to being used?—No.

543. In point of fact, does the law arm you with any authority as regards the asylums previous to their being used for the reception of inmates?—It gives no authority.

544. What authority does the law give to Inspectors as regards the management of asylums?—Well, that is a very complicated question. I do not think it gives to Inspectors any authoritative power at all.

545. Are the duties of the Inspector, as regards the asylums, therefore, confined principally to the mere duty of inspecting and reporting?—Inspecting, suggesting, and reporting.

546. Do you consider that the Governors of the asylums desire that the Inspectors should have some control as to the building arrangements?—Well, I am positive they would desire it; and in illustration of that I will give you a case. When the Cork Asylum was built, the Chairman said to me, "We will hold you responsible if we take this asylum from the Board of Works."

547. The Board of Governors are appointed, I believe, by the Lord Lieutenant in Council?—By the Lord Lieutenant in Council.

548. Are the Inspectors of Asylums also appointed members of the Board?—The Inspectors of Asylums were not originally members of the Boards; but on application from, I think, two or three Boards, expressing their desire that the Inspectors should be members, and particularly in reference to the Metropolitan Asylum at Richmond, we were made members of the Boards by name, in the time, I think, of Lord Eglington.

549. What is your opinion as to the advisability or otherwise of the Inspectors being members of the Boards?—My opinion is this, that if the Inspectors were not members of the Boards of Governors, the asylums in Ireland would be at a stand still occasionally from a deficient attendance.

550. On what do you found that opinion?—First, I have often gone to asylums where it was necessary to form one of the Board to constitute a meeting; secondly, in case of any improvement or alteration in the arrangements of an institution the Governors consult the Inspector, whom they look upon as one of their own body, anxious for the welfare of each particular asylum.

551. Is it the practice of the Inspector to vote on these Boards?—I have been asked to vote. I voted on three or four occasions. If it comes to a question of fiscal business—the expenditure of money—I should not vote except in my own county. I should certainly vote on any matter affecting the management of the asylum in a moral point of view.

552. Do you consider that the power given by law to the Poor Law Inspector of sitting at Boards, but not voting, would be sufficient?—No; I think giving a vote to the Inspector places him more on an equality with the gentlemen of the Board, and there is less reserve between these parties. The Inspector goes in a regular manner to the Board, and is there left to his own discretion. An ex-officio man goes with a sort of authority.

553. You have stated that the Boards are but indifferently attended?—I do not mean to say generally. I could adduce various instances of bad attendance on Boards—as at Waterford, where there was a very bad attendance. At Kilkenny, on the last Board day, there were only three to form a quorum. At the Richmond Metropolitan Asylum, there would be frequently no Board at all if the Inspector did not attend. At Ballinasloe there is a small attendance. At Mullingar a very efficient Board attends; still, since that asylum was opened, there has hardly been a meeting formed without the presence of one of the Inspectors.

554. Is the attendance at the Board at all influenced by the distance at which the Governors may reside from the place of meeting?—Well, taking Dublin as an instance, I should say not. Where there is an asylum situated in a country part, and not in the vicinity of a town, we endeavour, if possible, to get gentlemen of rank and position who reside as near to the asylum as possible appointed Governors; at the same time not neglecting the different baronies throughout the district.

555. Is it not possible the knowledge that two official gentlemen belong to these Boards, one or other of whom may be expected to attend on each occasion, and correct any proceedings they think objectionable, may influence the ordinary Governors to absent themselves from the meetings?—I should say not, for this simple reason, they do not know whether the Inspectors can attend or not. There are sixteen district asylums in Ireland, and the Inspectors cannot attend at them all.

555. Do you attend some one or other Board each month?—I think I attended last year fifty times at Boards.

557. Do you consider that the position of the Inspector, or his authority, is in any degree diminished by his sitting at these Boards?—Not in the slightest.

558. These Boards being the bodies who govern the asylums of which he is the Inspector?—Not in the slightest. I will prove that by adducing facts to show that the presence of the Inspector does not influence the Board one way or the other.

559. Does the attendance at these Boards interfere with the other duties properly belonging to an Inspector?—I think it amongst the most useful parts of our business.

560. How is the attendance at Boards a portion of the duties of inspection?—In this way: I do not suppose that, on an average, one Governor out of seven who attends the Board ever sets his feet inside the corridors of an asylum within the year. The Inspectors always go round; and a frequent question to the Inspectors is, "Well, gentlemen, have you been through the house? Is there any suggestion from you we could approve of?"

561. Would not such an inspection as you refer to be more effectually conducted by the Inspectors going to asylums upon occasions that they were not expected, than by their going on days when their presence at the Board might naturally be anticipated?—My opinion is that it would not; one inspection does not interfere with the other.

562. The Inspectors, I presume, take full part in the proceedings as regards the admission and discharge of lunatics?—Yes; I suppose my entries for the reception of patients into the Richmond Asylum are far more than those of any other Governor. I examine the cases in detail.

563. Are not the Inspectors, as members of Boards, liable to be overruled, and made responsible for the decisions of the majority, of which decisions, as Inspectors, they might disapprove?—Practically, I have not found it to be the case; it may be open to that objection. The reason I gave you before, and which I think answers the question, is this—that we do not vote, we merely give our opinion; and not voting, we are not, therefore, in a minority.

564. But you are, of course, entered as being present, and taking part in the proceedings of the Board?—Yes. I have never practically found any difficulty at all on that head.

565. Is not the circumstance of an Inspector voting—probably against a majority of a Board—likely to lead to a loss of influence on his part as Inspector?—No. I put it in this way:—The Inspectors are members of a Board; they go down to give their advice, and the Governors ask them what is their opinion. They may state their opinion. I will give you an illustration. Suppose that, at the Richmond Asylum, a number of servants had to be selected; we bring the candidates in and examine them. One member of the Board would say, I think So-and-so would make a good servant; and the Inspectors might take a different view, and say that they thought So-and-so would answer better. In that way there would be a difference of opinion, but it would not be upon principle.

566. Might it not happen that it would be the duty of the Inspector either to enforce the regulations of the Privy Council or to call for the interference of the Privy Council, in respect to the proceedings of a Board at which he attended?—Certainly. I can give you an instance in point, and a very important one. At the meeting of the Board of the Clonmel Asylum at which I was present, there was a sum of £850 asked for from the Privy Council. Though I was present at the Board, yet afterwards, when the matter was referred to our office, I saw there was an inaccuracy in the proceedings of the Board, inasmuch as the £850 was asked by them for building. Now, according to the rules and regulations of the Council, the building must first get their sanction. A Board cannot draw money, saying, "We intend to build with £850." They must obtain the sanction of the Council for the erection of the building in question. When I was present at the Board, I stated I thought the proceeding was inaccurate, and that the money would not be granted. However, I said, do you send up the demand, and I will have it properly submitted to the Privy Council. A letter was written to the Governors of the asylum, under date 2nd September, 1855, in reply to the application, stating that the estimate had been brought under the consideration of the Privy Council, whose attention was drawn to the sum of £850, to meet building and other expenses; and that a new item of expenditure, not being for support and maintenance, required the authorization of an order in Council to legalize it; the letter contained the inquiry, in the first place, how much of the sum was contemplated for building, and, next, whether such proposed outlay was authorized by an order in Council. There were other inquiries in the letter; but I may state, in answer to your question, that there was no collision between the Board and the Inspectors. The Board saw that the Inspectors fairly did their duty.

567. In that case you acquiesced in a matter to be submitted to the authorities, to which you were aware that the authorities would not agree?—No, I was not aware at the Board that the form had not been complied with; that might have been four or five months before.

568. Practically, do you think that any advantage arose from the presence of the Inspector at the Board on that day?—I do, for I went down on important business that day.

569. On that case was it of advantage?—I do not think his presence on that immediate case was of any consequence. The Inspector observed a technical error, and called attention to it, and the Board at once acquiesced.

570. Where there is a regular attendance of Governors, do you find that the Boards work satisfactorily?—Yes. As regards the fiscal business—the expenditure of lunatic asylums, I must say that the Boards of Governors, as a body, act most justly; so far as our department is concerned, they go on very smoothly.

571. Is the taking of contracts, and the regulation of expenditure generally, considered by the Board?—Yes; but I may mention that three members constitute a Board.

572. Although the Inspectors do not vote, do they not enter in the minutes of proceedings protests against measures of which they disapprove?—Never.

573. If they do not practically vote, would not the right to be present without the power of voting be sufficient?—I have answered that question. I think it is most agreeable for Governors to sit with the Inspectors as members of the Board, and more agreeable to the Inspectors themselves to do so.

574. Do the Inspectors attend as members of the Boards on the occasion of the half-yearly estimate being prepared?—They may; it depends on circumstances.

575. Are these half-yearly estimates transmitted to them to their office in Dublin?—Yes.

576. Are they by you transmitted to the Privy Council?—They are sent up to the Privy Council.

577. Do you examine these estimates and return them with a certificate to the Privy Council?—Every one of them; I have brought here the quarterly estimates for September, 1856, for the sixteen asylums.

578. When you return these estimates with your certificate to the Privy Council, are any items you object to usually disallowed by the Privy Council?—Perhaps you would allow me, before I answer that question, to state that the estimate is first sent to the Privy Council, by which it is referred to our offices for examination. We go through it in detail. If we find the calculation wrong, we return it to the asylum with a mark A, B, or C, pointing out any error in the calculation. Then, when ratified, we forward it, authenticated as correct, to the Privy Council, which passes it, as a matter of course.

579. Are these arrangements by an act of the Privy Council, and not by a specific enactment?—Yes.

580. In point of fact, the Inspectors have no control by law in these proceedings?—They have not. To be candid with you, we originated the practice.

581. The Board of Governors are appointed by the Lord Lieutenant in Council; are you aware upon whose recommendation generally?—I should say almost always upon the recommendation of the Inspectors.

582. That is a practice not required by law?—Yes.

583. As regards the officers of the institutions, we have been informed that, with two exceptions, the managers are medical men?—There are two or three exceptions.

584. The law does not require that such should be the case?—No.

585. What is your opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of the manager being a medical man?—My opinion is that he should be a medical man, and ever since I was Inspector of Asylums it has been the case.

586. Do you consider that the fact of a manager being either a physician or surgeon should have any weight as to the medical attendant of the institution being either a surgeon or physician?—Yes; I think if a manager is a medical man and resident physician, it would be well to have a practitioner with a surgical degree as visiting physician, and vice versa.

587. I believe at present the duties of a manager, as prescribed by the rules of 1843, are not so prescribed with the view to his being a medical man?—No.

588. Having stated that it would be advisable that a surgeon should be appointed where the medical manager is a physician, do you contemplate the medical manager discharging any medical duties with regard to patients?—Yes.

589. Then those would be duties beyond what the rules prescribe for the manager?—Yes; though there are no rules established by Order in Council, yet if there was an ex parte de corps between the resident physician and the visiting physician, they would go on satisfactorily.

590. In case of fever, or any other disease of that character prevailing, which would require more particularly the treatment of a physician, upon whom do you consider the responsibility for such treatment would rest, where the visiting medical officer is a surgeon, but the medical manager is a physician?—In a case of that kind I would consider the two men as acting together in council, and I consider the responsibility as equal. I have always thought it a great advantage to have a medical man attending the establishment, from this fact, that the habitude of the resident insensitizes him, more or less, from having that general knowledge of diseases that is occasionally so requisite, and which arises from an out-door practice.

591. Do you think that the appointment of a resident medical manager, distinctly as such, where there is a visiting physician, would be preferable to the present system, which does not provide for having a medical manager?—Unquestionably. It must be remembered that mental affections are very often connected with corporeal diseases.

592. Do you consider that although the resident medical officer, in case such an alteration was made in the law, would probably be withdrawn from practice, that still for the treatment of the particular cases which exist in the lunatic asylums, the experience he would obtain from a constant attendance upon lunatics would attach advantages to such an arrangement?—Yes. What I wish to explain upon the subject is this. If you have not a visiting physician, you must have a consulting physician; because it is a very serious thing, in a case of insanity, to throw the responsibility on one man of discharging a patient, who may commit some crime after being discharged. You must, therefore, have either a visiting physician or a consulting physician, who would be paid at each visit for his time. On that point there are two questions to be considered; the first is as to the benefit that would result to the patients, and the second is as to the expense to the country. I am convinced that the man who, with out-door practice, makes himself acquainted with the case of the patient, is fully as competent to pronounce as the resident physician, as to whether the patient is recovered or not, and as to his general fitness for being sent out of doors; I must add that, as far as my experience goes, I should myself, as a medical man, be very sorry, if a lunatic had been considered dangerous, to pronounce, after one or two visits to him, that he should be discharged. Again, taking the number of persons who are discharged from lunatic asylums, you would find that the consulting physician would cost more than a regular physician constantly visiting the asylum and charged with fixed responsibility.

593. Do you contemplate the consulting physician or surgeon being called in merely with reference to the discharge of a lunatic, or also with reference to the treatment of patients in the asylums?—Yes, I think this may occur. Suppose I am resident physician, and a complicated case of lunacy presents itself, and that there is no regular visiting physician, I would then think it my duty to send for a man to consult as often as would be necessary; whereas, if you have a regular visiting physician, he necessarily becomes better acquainted with such a case in his visits to the asylum.

594. Presuming that in case there should be a resident medical man in charge of an asylum, not merely a manager who happens to be a medical man, but a resident medical man in charge of the asylum, do you contemplate, that in all cases he should call in a consulting physician with reference to the treatment of cases under his charge?—Not in all cases; but I say if a man is a resident physician, and has not a visiting physician to assist him, I think it but fair that he should have the power, where necessary, to send for consulting physician.

595. Suppose a case arises where they differ as to the treatment?—Then a third should be called in.

596. Suppose the second, when called in, differs with the resident physician?—I should say then, as a matter of course, that the rule which holds good in all cases should prevail. The two consulting physicians ought to decide, as constituting a majority.

597. Then the treatment of the patients should be conducted according to the rule laid down by the two external physicians, and not by the man who has the medical charge of the establishment?—I have never heard of such a case, and indeed I do not know how it could be decided.

598. Is it your opinion that in an asylum having a competent medical manager, there should be either a visiting or consulting physician?—I think if the number of patients extends beyond 100, there should be, as a general rule. The only exception could be where the number of patients was below that number.

599. Is the propriety, or otherwise, of a resident medical man calling in a consulting physician to depend upon the numbers in the asylum?—No. Always assuming the resident physician is competent to discharge his duties, I have no objection to a consulting physician. The necessity of having a visiting physician, no matter what the talents of the resident physician may be, is always enhanced by the number of patients. Looking at these institutions in reference to such matters, there are two things to be considered. The first and most important is, the benefit that will arise to the lunatic inmates, and the next is the economical working. I say the latter consideration should not prevail where you have a number of patients, say over 100, in an asylum. Where there is only one man to look after 120, he can, of course, devote more time to them than if the number was larger; but then, there is the expenditure on the incidental cases, in which he may require a consulting physician. I should state that I am answering this question with reference to the feeling of the public at large about the working of these institutions, and I myself knowing that there is a great outcry against increasing the expenditure.

600. I believe in the case of the Cork Asylum the manager is the physician?—He is.

601. And in that case there is no visiting physician to the asylum?—There is a surgeon.

602. Supposing fever to break out in that asylum, there would be no physician whose duty it would be to look after the inmates who might be attacked by the disease?—Yes; there is a resident physician, and there is a surgeon, who is also a physician—a general practitioner.

603. By the resident physician you mean Dr. Power, the manager?—Yes.

604. As the rule at present stands, there is no obligation upon the manager to attend fever patients?—I say there is an obligation on Dr. Power, by virtue of his special appointment.

605. Supposing in the case of Cork, a difference arose between Dr. Power, the manager, and the visiting surgeon, as to the treatment of any patient, whose opinion should prevail?—I never heard of there being any difference between them.

606. My question presumes a difference?—I should recommend a consulting physician to be called in.

607. Supposing the arrangement as regards the asylum is altered, so that the medical officer should be resident, on whom do you consider that the responsibility of discharging the daily medical duties and the treatment of the patients should rest?—The resident medical man.

608. Would you render it obligatory on him to call in a consulting physician on all occasions, or would you leave him the option of omitting to do so altogether if he chose?—Certainly. I think it would be his duty to call a physician on an occasion when a patient, for instance, came into the asylum labouring under peculiar symptoms.

609. Do you, or not, think it desirable that the resident medical officer should have full and uncontrolled power as to the treatment of patients?—Certainly not. If it were so, I would not have a visiting physician. I am an advocate for having visiting physicians—one attached permanently to each asylum. If that was not the case, there should be an opportunity of having a consulting physician, assuming that what is now the practice be legalized by Act of Parliament.

610. If the visiting physician goes to the asylum, is the resident physician to go round the wards with him?—Certainly; and in every instance where a paralytic would be brought in for the first time, it would be the duty of the resident physician to state all the facts to the visiting physician, and of both to consult as to the course that should be adopted.

611. Do you see any difficulty in preparing rules which would specify the duties of the resident medical man and the visiting or consulting physician in the case you put?—Certainly not.

612. Would you propose that in the case of an asylum having a very small number of inmates, they should be treated for their diseases apart from the treatment of their insanity by the resident medical officer?—In case of illness of a serious nature, I have already said, there should be a consulting physician, and the resident medical officer would be bound in duty to his patients to call for that consulting physician, that is, supposing there was no regularly employed visiting physician. It becomes a question in the mind of the resident medical man, as to whether it is a difficult case, and I would give him the power to call for a consulting physician when he deemed it necessary.

613. Then the calling in of a consulting physician, in the case of an asylum having a small number of patients, would rest altogether at the option of the resident medical officer?—I should think it would.

614. You would propose that?—Yes; it is always understood that the resident medical officer is a man suitable for the place, that he is a competent medical man. I would give him the power, when he felt it necessary in a complicated case, to call in other physicians. I am speaking of corporeal diseases equally as of mental.

615. Would the resident medical officer, in a small asylum, be as competent to treat diseases, or deal with accidents, as a person in general out-door practice, hospital and private?—I distinctly state it as my opinion, that a continued residence in an asylum would deprive him of the opportunity of acquiring that general knowledge of diseases which must necessarily be obtained by out-door practice, for which reason there appears to me an obvious necessity for having a physician who practises generally out of doors, and meets diseases in every shape and under the variable types which epidemics assume.

616. Is that opinion given without reference to the previous experience and education of the manager?—No; it is very difficult to do it. I am meeting the case put by Dr. Corrigan. I am speaking of a continual residence as manager in an asylum.

617. Would not a resident physician, who is attached to a small asylum, after an interval of some years, have less practical knowledge of diseases than a man who is in charge of a large asylum?—Certainly, from a diminution of practice that follows as a matter of course.

618. Would it not, then, be at least equally necessary that there should be a visiting physician to a small asylum as a large one?—No. Taking a small asylum with twenty inmates, the life of each inmate, per se, is of equal importance as if there were 500 inmates; but the question is one of economy, and whether you are to pay a visiting physician for twenty, when a consulting physician for that number would be equally available and useful.

619. Are not medical remedies, in some degree, for ordinary bodily illness affected or modified by the fact of the party being insane?—That is a very nice question to answer. I cannot answer that ex cathedra; it might or might not.

620. Would not a medical man, having the constant charge of the insane, be a better judge of what medical remedies to apply to them than the general medical practitioner, who has no experience as to insanity?—The more experience a man has of a particular disease, ceteris paribus, the more competent he is to treat it.

INSPECTORS OF LUNATIC ASYLUMS—GENERAL STATE OF ASYLUMS AND LUNACY.

John Nugent, Esq., M.D., further examined on oath.

621. With reference to the arrangement to which your examination on Saturday was directed—namely, that of having a medical man as manager, and a consulting physician to attend the asylums, may it not arise that, from a desire to meet the views of the Board of Governors, on the score of economy, the manager would not be anxious upon all occasions to incur the expense of requiring the consulting physician's attendance if that officer was paid by fees?—That is one of the objections to having a consulting physician.

622. Would that objection exist if he was paid by salary?—It could not.

Wages of attendants and servants.

623. Do you propose that daily visits by a physician should be made to every district asylum, irrespective of the number of the inmates?—I should have it every second day, or more frequently if necessary. The visiting physician would be the best judge of that. He is competent to form an opinion whether, in case of disease, it would be necessary for him to go daily, or twice a day, or to defer his visits if there was nothing very particular, as he thought, to a second day. I think, on principle, it is better to visit daily.

624. Do you find that the wages usually given by the Governors are sufficient to secure the services of proper attendants for the patients?—I think it highly advisable that the wages should be raised, in order to secure a better class of attendants and servants.

625. Do you consider that the remuneration should be based upon a system of annual increase?—To a certain extent, a periodical increase depending upon good conduct. I have adopted that, with the permission of the Government, at Dundrum Asylum. We always, where we can, raise the second-class attendants to higher places, if vacancies occur. The promotion is dependent upon good conduct.

626. Are the arrangements with reference to the discharge of the apothecaries' duties generally satisfactory?—I am not aware of any complaints having been made on that head.

627. Are you yourself satisfied that they are generally such as may be approved of?—I should think so, inasmuch as neither resident nor visiting physicians ever complained of inattention on their part. The apothecaries are not resident, and the physician may go to the asylum very frequently and not see an apothecary. It is the duty of the resident or visiting physician to report to the Inspector if any neglect occurs—any knowledge, however, is negative on the point.

628. Are the medicines always provided out of the funds of the institution?—Yes.

629. The apothecary has no interest in the supply of the medicines, he is paid merely for compounding?—That is the case, except in Dundrum Asylum; we had to get medicines at Dundrum, and finally we employed the resident apothecary to supply them.

630. What arrangements are made for having a medical attendant at an institution in the absence of the visiting physician, where the manager may not be a medical man?—The rule is this:—The medical man gets permission from the Board to absent himself; if the Board grants that permission, he supplies a competent medical man, pro tempore, to take his place. He cannot absent himself without leave.

631. By whom are the superior officers of the asylums appointed?—They have been appointed, with perhaps one or two exceptions, always by the Lord Lieutenant, very frequently on the recommendation of the Board. The rule is—that as the manager is responsible for the well-being of the institution, he shall have the appointment of the minor officers; that is the rule, but it is not acted upon.

632. What are the exceptions in the case of superior officers?—I think the Board at Cork appointed the matron to that institution, and, after having made the appointment, wrote up for the sanction of the Lord Lieutenant.

633. In cases where the officers are not appointed in the manner provided by the regulations, by whom are they appointed?—The general practice is this—as at the Richmond Asylum—the persons who are to be appointed are brought before the Board with testimonials, we elect a party for a month, and at the expiration of the month, acting on the report of the manager, accept or refuse his services, as the case may be. That is pretty much the rule; I think a modification of that practice exists in the other asylums.

634. Does the power of dismissal rest upon the persons who make the appointment?—Suspension, if I may use the term, rests with the manager, and dismissal with the Board.

635. It has been stated in evidence, that in certain asylums there are no chaplains—what is your opinion as to the necessity for having such officers to attend the district asylums?—My opinion is, unequivocally, that no asylum should be without chaplains.

636. Has it ever been represented to you by the inmates of the asylums where there are no chaplains, that they desired the offices of clergymen?—Yes.

637. What proportion of the inmates of asylums do you consider generally would be capable of benefiting by the ministrations of clergymen?—Well, I should say probably one-third fully, perhaps two-fifths, not all on the same day, but within the time of their residence in the asylum.

638. Independently of the religious question, has the attendance upon divine worship or not a good effect upon the patients?—I am satisfied it exercises a most moral effect upon them.

639. Even upon those who are not capable of deriving great spiritual advantages from it?—Yes, it has a mollifying influence upon the mind, and is part of the curative system. I am perfectly convinced that if we had not the ministrations of clergymen in the Dundrum Asylum, it would be utterly impossible to keep the patients quiet; that I know from my daily experience.

640. In those asylums to which chaplains have been appointed, have they been provided for the inmates of every religious persuasion?—There are three great divisions, if I may use the term, of religions in Ireland—Protestants, Roman Catholics, and Presbyterians. In the southern and western counties the proportion of Presbyterians is a smallity. The populations are confined to the Catholic church and to Protestantism, I mean that of the Established Church; but in the North there is a Presbyterian, a Protestant, and Roman Catholic chaplain attached to the Omagh Asylum; there is a Protestant, a Catholic, and Presbyterian clergyman attached to the Derry Asylum, and there are beneficial results from their ministrations. No question as to religion arises either between the patients or servants of the asylum or the clergymen. I may further state, that at the Sligo Asylum there is a Protestant, Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic chaplain. At the Armagh Asylum, I believe there is no clergyman regularly attached, but the Archbishop of Armagh pays one of his subordinate clergymen for attending, and, I believe, Archbishop Dixon, when necessary, sends a clergyman. In the Belfast Asylum there is no attendance on the part of clergymen; nominally, whenever patients require them, they are sent for.

641. In those asylums where chaplains have not been appointed, are we to understand no religious prayer takes place, or no religious instruction or ministrations is given?—No. With regard to the Belfast Asylum, I understand, on unquestionable authority, that service used to be performed, or what is equivalent, prayers read by the resident physician to the inmates, a fact tending to establish the propriety of having divine worship in the asylum. I never heard him myself, but I believe it to be the case. When the Inspectors heard this, they said at once, "if a lay person is so efficient, why refuse to the inmates the advantages of having clergymen of their own persuasions to discharge the duties."

642. Would the services of a clergyman of the Established Church suffice for the members of other Protestant churches, not belonging to the Established?—I certainly think you have no right to ask a Presbyterian to go to an Episcopalian place of worship.

643. I believe that in some of the asylums to which chaplains are at present attached, for many years there were none?—Yes.

644. Are you enabled to state whether beneficial results have ensued from the appointment of chaplains in those cases?—I will state my full belief, that beneficial results have arisen, both in a curative and moral point of view.

645. In those cases where chaplains have not been appointed, are any religious books allowed to be used by the inmates, or provided for them?—There are, but I should say to a very limited extent.

646. By whom are they selected?—They are selected, of course, by the Governors of different persuasions.

647. Have any objections been made to provide such books by the Board of Governors in any case?—No.

648. What is the fact in Belfast Asylum as regards the providing of religious books?—I am satisfied that any religious book that would be asked for by a patient of any persuasion, would be granted. The objection there is only to the visiting of clergymen officially appointed.

649. Is any difficulty experienced by the patients in obtaining the attendance of a clergyman when they require one?—The only answer I can give you is, that I found, on inquiry, three was a Roman Catholic clergyman in the Belfast Asylum, I think, on four or five occasions only during one year. In that asylum there are over 300 patients, and I know that in asylums where there are not half the number of patients, clergymen have visited one hundred times in a year—clergymen both of the Roman Catholic and Protestant persuasions. Therefore, when I find a clergyman has been called in but three or four times in the year, I must come to the conclusion that their visits are not encouraged.

650. Is there a record kept of their visits?—Yes, the Bishop of Down, and Dr. Denvir, the Roman Catholic Bishop (especially the latter), have, I may state, written on various occasions, that due facilities have not been extended for the admission of clergymen, and that patients have frequently died without clerical ministrations. The Roman Catholic clergymen further deem it the duty of the managers of institutions of the kind, to procure their admission in all cases, even though the patients, not being in the habit of seeing regular chaplains, do not inquire for them, inasmuch, as it is a duty incumbent on them to visit members of their persuasion in extremo moris.

651. Is not the Board of Governors of each asylum bound by the thirteenth rule to make regulations for the admission of clergymen, and the celebration of divine service for such of the inmates as may be considered fit to attend?—They are.

652. Have any such regulations been framed in the case of the Armagh and Belfast asylums?—They have made regulations for the admission of clergymen, but they have made no arrangements for the celebration of divine service.

653. I believe that, in many of these district asylums for the lunatic poor, there are several patients who pay?—Comparatively, there are very few. There are about forty patients paying, whilst altogether we have about 3,700 paupers.

654. Is the form for the admission of these paying patients the same as in the case of other admissions?—Yes; except that there is no affidavit as to their being paupers.

655. Is there any bond given for the payment of the sum which the parties transmitting the lunatic agree to pay?—Perhaps not a bond; there is an arrangement in writing, but not a regular bond.

656. Practically, are these engagements fulfilled?—I think, practically, they are, but perhaps not at all times; for example, I have known patients to be in an asylum for a year or two, and at the end of that time their families to plead poverty.

657. Under what provision of the law do those admissions of paying patients take place?—I do not believe there is any provision in the law for it. The practice, I understand, occasionally obtains in England, as at Essex.

658. Is a patient removed from an asylum in a case where his family cease to comply with the arrangement to pay?—No; I think the Board generally make inquiries, and find out whether they would be justified in keeping the lunatic. I will adduce a case. There was a man admitted into the Carlisle Asylum about eight months ago; his father paid for him for about six months, and he then ceased paying. Application was made to him, and he said he had expended his money in educating this young man, who was twenty-five years of age, and that there was no legal obligation upon him to support him. He further said that he should not be called upon to pay for him; and I believe there is no legal power to enforce the contract.

659. In the case to which you have referred, the patient has become a pauper lunatic in the asylum without having been admitted as a pauper, or a declaration of poverty having been made in his behalf?—A declaration of poverty must now be made in his behalf.

660. What is your opinion as to the propriety of paying patients being maintained in asylums supported by public taxation?—Well, I considered that subject very much, and looked upon it in a two-fold view. I have considered the claims of the classes who have not means sufficient for their maintenance in a private asylum, and yet as to whom it cannot be avowed that they are paupers. I do think that class should be admitted into public asylums, particularly as they come from the ratepayers for the most part, whose families have been supporting those institutions for years upon years. I am satisfied that they have a moral right to be admitted, under proper restrictions, into lunatic asylums. Further, I think that, in a public point of view, you are doing a benefit to society; because there is nothing more certain than this, that the more care you take of lunatics, the more you check the propagation of insanity. If it should ever happen that every lunatic in Ireland was put up for a certain number of years, you would find a diminution of insanity in the next generation.

661. Do you consider that the lunatic poor should have the preference for admission to those institutions before such paying patients?—Certainly. I think the original object of building the institutions was for the reception of the lunatic poor; but if there were vacancies, they should not remain dead letters, but should be thrown open for the benefit of the classes to whom I have referred. I have corresponded with various persons on the subject, and amongst others, with Lord Clancarty, who has paid great attention to it. He has written to me, urging the propriety of such a system.

662. Would making provisions for such cases, be not in itself an ultimate relief to the ratepayers, by preventing such patients becoming chargeable as permanent lunatics?—I am of opinion the result of not admitting the class of patients in question would be, in the first place, to deprive them of proper care in the early stage of the disease, when it is curable; and in the second, to render them burdens upon society at large, and force their families to put them into lunatic asylums at the public expense, in spite of all objections, for they may become dangerous, and as such would be sent to goal to guard against their doing violence.

663. Do you consider that the paying patients in the district asylums are generally of a class little above paupers?—Very little above paupers. A man has sixty or eighty acres of ground; his beneficial interest in that will probably be £120 or £130 a-year, out of which he has to maintain himself, his wife, and probably four or five children. That man cannot swear that he is a pauper, and if he has a lunatic child, he offers at an asylum as much as he would expend on that child in his own house, in order to secure the benefit of his admission into an asylum. If he is refused, some opportunity is taken of bringing the lunatic before a magistrate, and swearing him to be dangerous. He is sent to prison, and from the prison he is transmitted, by a warrant from the Lord Lieutenant, to the district asylum.

664. But surely, in the case you have taken, a man having eighty acres of land is in a considerable degree removed from pauperism?—Yes, in a considerable degree; but remember he has duties towards other members of his family, and if he is obliged to pay £40 or £50 a-year for one lunatic child, he will be doing a gross injustice to his wife and other children, and he will be pauperising himself and family.

665. Do you think it is likely that the admission of patients of that class would be carried to such an extent as materially to interfere with the object for which the asylums for the lunatic poor were established?—It is open to that objection, but that could be guarded against by strict rules and regulations. Præes facit, it is open to the objection you have stated, and we must obviate it by strict rules and regulations, and by having inquiries on oath.

666. It is presumed the patients so received are to have the same accommodation and treatment as ordinary paupers?—Yes.

667. Do you consider that an injurious effect would result to the patients themselves from their being treated for lunacy in an establishment where lunatic paupers are confined?—Certainly not, the gradation is so imperceptible in social life.

668. Is any provision made for lunatics of the middle and other classes above paupers?—Certainly not.

669. Is not lunacy in a family frequently of itself a cause of pauperism?—Decidedly.

670. When you speak of the vacant places in an asylum, are we to understand that there are not a sufficient number of poor out of the asylum, without admitting paying patients?—No; there are one or two asylums, Killarney, for instance, where there is verge enough for admitting paying patients.

671. Am I to understand that in the case of the Killarney Asylum, the county of Kerry does not contain a sufficient number of lunatic poor who would be fit objects for admission to that asylum?—They have not presented themselves for admission as yet, and the house has been in operation two years.

672. I find from a return in your last Report, that there were 161 lunatics of that description in the county Kerry, not confined in asylums, goals, or workhouses?—Yes, that is 151 persons mentally affected; but if you observe in the text of our report, we stated that we got in every possible way a return of every individual whose mind was affected, no matter how much or how little. We wanted to bring before the public the state of disease in Ireland as regards the mental manifestations.

673. Do you not consider it desirable that wandering idiots should be provided for in those institutions established for the lunatic poor?—I think they should be provided for in institutions, but not in institutions of such a costly nature as the asylums in Ireland are; they have been intended for curative purposes as far as possible.

674. Do you consider that epileptic imbeciles generally should be treated in the District Lunatic Asylums or in other institutions?—I think epileptic imbeciles should be under proper surveillance. I would not put them in the District Asylums; they should be placed separately, and properly looked after in every sense of the word; but I think it would be a piece of extravagance to locate them in district asylums; at the same time, I say they ought to be under control as lunatics. The question is, whether you should establish three or four large institutions in Ireland for them, or, where there was no great necessity for that, erect plain, substantial buildings, with common conveniences, and also clean and well ventilated.

675. Are those who are returned as lunatics in Return No. 4, to your Seventh Report, of a class that ought to be admitted into the asylums?—I cannot answer that, as I have not seen the lunatics; and, as those returns are taken by the police, many might be entered as lunatics who are not really such.

676. How far does the return to which you have referred give an indication of the number of lunatic poor for whom provision ought to be made, and who are at present at large in the county Kerry?—We may form an approximate idea from the returns. As I have stated, we send out to get a return of the persons mentally affected. We know that mental diseases, to a certain extent in various phases, exist, but we cannot say that every individual so affected is a fit subject for a District Lunatic Asylum.

677. Upon what statistics have you grounded your recommendation for the erection of additional asylums and the formation of new districts?—I think the strongest practical proof that can be given on the subject is—first, the number of applications directed to the district asylums for lunatics who cannot get admission; and, secondly, the number of lunatics in gaols. I think these constitute distinct and unqualified proof as to the extent of lunacy, and then there are various cases, as we knew on good authority, from the Poor Law Boards, of the lunatics in poorhouses. We gather the necessity for what we recommend from these circumstances. When we were erecting the Kilkenny Asylum, we had only ninety-two patients; I went through the whole county, and calculated we could get 140. We had the asylum built for 150, and we must now enlarge it for 40 more. There is a per centage of insanity amongst the population, which affords the best data to go upon. But some counties are more lunatic than others.

678. When you speak of a per centage of insanity, is not that per centage based upon some returns similar to that to which you have referred?—Yes, but the per centage of insanity is taken generally; we cannot analyse it. It is presumed that the per centage in England is about one to 100 or 800, and it is about the same, I think, in Ireland.

679. Do you think there is at present a want of accommodation for the lunatic poor in Ireland?—Unquestionably.

680. Does your answer refer to all classes of individuals, imbeciles and idiots, to whom you have referred, or to curative cases?—To curative and dangerous cases. In the county of Wexford, for instance, there are at present twenty-six or twenty-seven such cases in the gaol.

681. Have you had to consider any memorial with reference to additional accommodation for the district of Carlow, in which Wexford is now included?—Yes, I attended the Grand Jury of Wexford on two occasions, and also the Boards at Carlow. At their last meeting the Grand Jury proposed to build an asylum, and to spend £20,000 in erecting one for the accommodation of 160 patients.

682. At what conclusion have you arrived as to the propriety or otherwise of providing additional accommodation for the lunatics of the district?—I feel that additional accommodation is absolutely necessary. The district of Carlow at present consists of the counties of Kildare, Carlow, and Wexford. The county Wexford is remote from the asylum, some parts of it being seventy miles distant. It is very much of an insulated county, bounded by the sea on one side, and by mountains on the other; and it is a great source of expense sending lunatics to Carlow. There must be either an addition built to the Carlow Asylum, or a new asylum built in the county Wexford. The question upon which I went down to the meeting of the Board, was that of building a new asylum in Wexford, or an addition to the present building in Carlow. There are ninety-seven lunatics from Wexford in the Carlow Asylum, and there are some twenty-six or twenty-seven in the Wexford gaol, besides outstanding cases of application. Carlow Asylum was originally built for 100, and without any structural addition it has been made to contain nearly 205. Therefore the necessity of enlarging it, or making some change, is obvious, and the question was, whether it would be better to divide the district and constitute Wexford a district in itself with a new asylum. That county is proverbially and unquestionably the most insane county in Ireland, next to Kilkenny. I have no hesitation in saying, that if an asylum is built in Wexford for 150 or 160 patients, in the course of three years it will be filled with lunatic patients.

683. You have satisfied yourself that there exists a necessity for additional accommodation for curative cases in that district?—Decidedly, for curative and dangerous cases. You would misunderstand me if you understood me to say every asylum is restricted to curative cases. Many lunatics, if not properly looked after, would become dangerous.

684. Do you think it would be possible to provide this additional lunatic accommodation in such a manner, that the existing staff of the Carlow Asylum could be available for the institution?—Certainly not; because in proportion to the extension of the number of lunatics you must increase your staff. The only economy that would be effected by an addition to the present asylum, would be in not having a second medical man and a second resident manager.

685. The increase of establishment charges does not necessarily follow in the exact ratio of the increase of inmates?—Certainly not.

686. Would the site of the Carlow District Asylum or the plan of construction admit of its being considerably enlarged, with due regard to the arrangement and management of the institution?—No; I think its structural formation incorporates it for enlargement.

687. What is your opinion upon the question of the removal of a number of the present chronic and harmless imbeciles in asylums, in order to make room for recent incurable cases?—I think there are a great many lunatics in asylums, who might be removed from them, harmless, quiet persons; but I would not remove every harmless, quiet person, because he happened to be harmless in the asylum.

688. What provision would you make for those removed?—I would erect additional asylums—plain substantial buildings, where you could insure the safe custody of such persons, and at the same time have for them a moderate amount of appliances. I think it would be well to have one in each district. There is expense in sending them to a distance, which would be the result of having only provincial institutions.

689. Have you ever recommended to the Government the erection of such an institution?—Yes, we have constantly suggested it.

690. I believe a power exists under the present law for the establishment of such institutions?—Yes.

691. Has that power ever been exercised?—No. We have enlarged the Belfast and other asylums.

692. I refer to the 15th sec. of the 8th and 9th Vict., c. 107, which enables the Lord Lieutenant to establish provincial lunatic asylums, for the sole and exclusive reception of particular classes of pauper lunatics?—Yes, that section enables him.

693. Would you not consider provincial asylums, for the reception of those classes to which you refer as desirable as local institutions?—Certainly not so desirable.

694. Do you consider that such additional buildings might be erected in contiguity to the existing asylums, which would admit of the same staff, with a small addition, acting for them?—I do.

695. Would you limit the size of district asylums?—I, in no instance, would have the accommodation for more than 400 or 500 patients. I think, with all respect, these overgrown asylums in England are too large. I consider a building that would accommodate 250 or 300 inmates to be a reasonably sized asylum for the efficient treatment of insanity.

696. What is your opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of detaining chronic and imbecile cases in the workhouses?—I think that, adhering to principle, it would be better to have them attached to the asylums. I am not an advocate for having lunatics mixed up, under any circumstances, with paupers in a workhouse; of course, if the Board think it more economical to take a workhouse that was not occupied, and convert that into an hospital for the district, it would be better than the present system.

697. My question referred to the propriety or otherwise of detaining chronic and imbecile cases in workhouses actually occupied, where a large number of inmates are of course sane?—I am adverse to this proposition. It is always the better plan to have lunatics, in their various phases, under the same control, in the same institution. If you have not that, the next best thing you can do is to allocate the workhouses; but allocate such a portion of them for lunatics as that they shall be totally distinct, in every respect, from the pauper department; additional grounds, suitable rooms and attendants, and above all things have a better description of diet; in fact, have the diet in the workhouses for pauper lunatics the same as you would give them in a lunatic asylum. It is a question now very much discussed in Derry and Donegal.

698. I ask you whether you would not prefer such additional asylums of a cheaper character, to lunatic wards in workhouses for the chronic idiots?—I presume the same course would be taken in both of them, and it is a good deal a question of economy. I am quite sure that in Derry and Donegal the Governors will say, "Our asylum is large enough for curative purposes; we will take the workhouses and put the chronic cases into them." I say, that is well enough, if you make the workhouses suitable establishments for the reception of the insane, and are not niggardly; but take care to have the insane of the district put into them properly fed and clothed, and have them cleanly, and the houses well ventilated. I do not see any objection to it in that case.

699. Would you not think that such a building as you have described for the district, would be preferable for the persons who would be its inmates, to having them scattered about in various union workhouses, both as regards their comfort and treatment, and as regards economy?—Yes; I said I would have one district asylum, and convert a workhouse into a proper asylum for that class.

700. Would the cases you propose to place in these separate institutions be, in fact, incurable cases?—Yes, tranquil and incurable cases.

701. Supposing this class were confined in lunatic wards of the workhouses, properly prepared for the purpose of their reception, would you consider it desirable that they should be separated from the other sane inmates of the workhouses altogether?—Certainly.

Erection of separate Asylums for chronic and harmless cases, whether district or provincial.

Detention of chronic and imbecile cases in workhouses.

702. Would you consider it desirable that any central control should be exercised by Commissioners or Inspectors over the treatment of these patients, beyond the mere inspection?—Decidedly, I think there ought to be the same code of rules and regulations, and that the Lunatic department should be managed just as lunatic asylums are.

703. In the case of a workhouse being entirely converted into a lunatic asylum for the district for the class to which you refer, would you propose that the government of the institution should rest with the Board of Governors of the district asylum?—I would.

704. Are there many workhouses in Ireland, which you consider might be made available in consequence of the reduction of the number of paupers, for the reception of the lunatic class to which you refer?—Yes. The other day, a gentleman from the county of Donegal, when I was at Lifford, said, why not make the Letterkenney poorhouse a place for the reception of chronic cases? I suppose it would contain 200.

705. You are aware of the general plan of construction of workhouses in Ireland?—Yes.

706. Do you think such buildings might easily be converted into proper asylums for the reception of the class to which you refer?—Yes; I think they could be made available for that purpose.

707. Do you think the quantity of ground usually attached to workhouses would be sufficient for these classes?—Certainly not. I think there should be thirty statute acres to 250 patients, for those are the people most available for out-door labour.

708. I believe in some cases that quantity of land is already attached to workhouses?—I do not know.

709. You think the labour of the classes who would be placed in these institutions should be properly employed?—Yes.

710. You think the effect of the arrangements you have contemplated would be, to a certain extent, to increase the curative accommodation in Ireland?—Certainly.

711. Do you consider that any such arrangement could be made in the case of the districts of Derry and Carlow, which at present call for additional lunatic accommodation?—I think we might manage in Derry, but we could not do so in Carlow.

712. What is your opinion as to the effect of such institutions upon the number of lunatics in Ireland?—I think the less lunatic accommodation you have, the more you propagate insanity. If you put every case of lunacy up in Ireland, in the course of each generation the diminution of lunacy would go on pari passu.

713. We have been informed that the Lunatic Asylum of Clonmel is not sufficiently large for the accommodation of the lunatic poor of that district?—Certainly not.

714. In what way would you propose the additional lunacy accommodation should be provided?—That has been considered. Were it not that the present building is up against a hill, we could increase it. I would propose to enlarge it in such a way, as to render the present kitchens and washhouses available.

715. Is it your opinion that an enlargement of the asylum would meet the wants of the district?—I think if it was enlarged for about eighty patients it would meet the wants of the district. The county of Tipperary is divided into two ridings, the North and the South. Clonmel is in the south. The population of the North Riding is greater than that of the South. There are 136 patients in the Clonmel Asylum, and I believe only forty of them belong to the North Riding, thus, showing the facility that exists for getting into an asylum patients in the immediate vicinity.

716. Do you think that the position of the asylum on the confines of a large district, naturally tends to its not being available for the remote parts of that district?—Decidedly. We always find in a district of three counties, that the county in which the asylum stands has more patients in it in proportion than there are from the other two counties.

717. Is there any provision for distributing the accommodation between the contributing counties?—Yes. A certain amount of money was levied from each county, in proportion to the number of patients each county was to send. For example, when the Carlow Asylum was built, it cost £22,000, of which Kilkenny paid £7,000, Wexford, between £6,000 and £7,000, Carlow, £3,000, and the difference was paid by Kildare. I am speaking in round numbers. Of course, then, you would say that Kilkenny, having paid £7,000, had a right to have twice the number of lunatics in the asylum as the county that only paid £3,000. But, eventually, as soon as the asylum began to get crowded, urgent cases, no matter from what point, most likely the nearest points, were admitted, and the Lord Lieutenant might send possibly six cases on the same day from the gaols, counterbalancing the number that ought to be in the asylum from the several districts. That furnishes an argument in favour of each county, when it can fairly be done, having its own asylum. It gets its just and legitimate proportion of accommodation in that case; but where two or three counties are attached to an asylum, the practical result generally is, that the country in the vicinity of the establishment sends more patients to it than the more remote portions of the district. This is exemplified in the county of Tipperary Asylum, where the North Riding, with a larger population, has comparatively few in the asylum.

718. Would places be left vacant in an asylum because the number of inmates from a distant county might not be as large as the county was entitled to?—Certainly.

719. It has been stated that there have been for a considerable time between thirty and forty vacancies in the Ballinasloe Asylum?—Yes. That was originally an asylum for the whole province of Connaught, and two counties were detached, and all the patients in the asylum from the counties of Sligo and Leitrim were removed from it when the Sligo Asylum was built, which caused a great reduction. Another reason is, that the asylum itself was enlarged a little before for the other three counties.

Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums—General Secretaries of Asylums and Lunacy.

J. NAGERT, Esq., M.D.

720. Do you consider that the existence of vacancies in the Ballinasloe Asylum is a satisfactory indication that there is no use for further accommodation for the lunatic poor in the counties of Galway, Mayo, and Roscommon?—I think for the lunatic poor certainly not. I think for curative purposes it is large enough; but if the idiotic and epileptic lunatics were brought in from the three counties, it would not be large enough, and there would be a strong necessity in two or three years for erecting such a building as we propose for chronic, incurable, and epileptic cases.

721. How do you account for these vacancies existing so long in the Ballinasloe Asylum, if there are curative cases amongst the lunatic poor that should be admitted?—Ballinasloe Asylum was unfortunate in being built at the end of the district; geographically, it is in the worst situation—there are parts of the district 120 miles distant.

722. Then it is your opinion that there are many lunatics belonging to the county Mayo, who ought to be sent to the asylum, and who would be sent were it more central?—Certainly; the families of lunatics in that part of the district have not the means to send them.

Proposal improved.

723. The addition of a building for chronic and imbecile cases at Ballinasloe, would not afford to the lunatic poor of Mayo the facility of access to the institution, which you consider they are at present debarred of?—It would not. If I were to build, I would build the asylum I propose in the more remote districts of Mayo, giving a facility for sending the violent cases to Ballinasloe.

Mode of providing Asylum accommodation for paying patients of limited means.

724. You have spoken in your examination of the propriety of making provision for patients who are able to pay some proportion of their cost or their maintenance, and who are not paupers?—Yes.

725. Is there any other way you could suggest for making provision for them beyond their reception into district lunatic asylums?—There are only two ways in which it could be done. One would be, if the Government advanced the money from a benevolent object, and repaid itself afterwards by the patients to whom I have referred. The other would be, if benevolent people would form a joint-stock company, and run the chance of doing it. I am thoroughly adverse to private asylums, where small sums would be paid; because I think it would be trading on the miseries of such lunatics.

Association of pauper and paying patients.

726. Are you aware that a very strong feeling has grown up against the association of paying and pauper patients in the same asylum?—Yes; I know that in asylums in England, Edinburgh, and Perth, there were pauper patients paying nothing, and there were also private patients paying large sums—upwards of £150 and £200 a-year, and having every comfort supplied to them, and means of driving out. That in itself is a bad principle; but if you admit patients who will pay merely the simple expense of their maintenance, the same as would be the cost of a pauper patient, and would reconcile themselves to such treatment, the system would not have any bad effect. In France, at Auxerre, Lyons, and Dijon, where there are paying patients, there was no objection. If you have a patient paying merely his proportion of the expense of the building and his cost of maintenance in the way I have described, he cannot then assume airs.

727. Do you think that in Ireland, independently of the payment of money, there would be a moral repugnance on the part of their friends to put patients, for whom they would pay, into the same asylum with pauper patients?—Not on the part of families who would try and take advantage of the asylum.

System of separate Asylums.

728. Would it be, in your opinion, more advisable to place the paying patients and the pauper patients together in the same asylum, or to have separate asylums for those who pay for their maintenance?—My answer to that is this—If it could be done, either by the establishment of an institution by voluntary contributions, or if the Government came in and erected such an institution, and that the patients admitted paid something beyond the mere cost of their maintenance, so that it would be no loss to any parties, the arrangement would prove satisfactory.

729. Are you aware that in England there are institutions of that kind, not conducted for profit by private individuals, but which are self-supporting?—I am aware of it.

Mode of payment in District Asylums.

730. Are the payments for paying patients in district asylums made quarterly?—That is a matter of arrangement. I think that, generally, it is half-yearly. Very often it occurs, that when a patient is entering an asylum, £12 or £15 is paid when the expense would be about £18 a-year, the friends of the lunatic would be told if he gets on well, and recovers in four months or so, we will charge you for that time and give you the difference; but if he continues ill for a year, you will have to come and pay the balance.

731. Have you known cases in Ireland in which persons of the middle classes took advantage of the district asylums to send their relatives to them?—I have known some cases where respectable, but reduced, families, solicited the admission of their relatives to district asylums.

732. I believe there are in Ireland a large number of wandering lunatics—a class of idiots and imbeciles, whom it is an injury to society should be at large?—I think so.

733. Do you think that the law as it at present stands, affords sufficient power for the removal of such cases to lunatic asylums?—No. They can only be admitted on application, and there is no one to apply for them.

734. Does the feeling prevail, or otherwise, amongst the people, of protecting these idiots, even when deserted by their friends, rather than facilitate their transmission to asylums?—Yes, they employ them as their messengers, or to watch sheep, or to look after cattle. They do not encourage their transmission to asylums.

Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums.—General State of Asylums and Lunacy.
J. Nugent, Esq., M.D.
Lunatics in work-houses.

735. Are you in the habit of inspecting, in each year, the workhouses in which lunatics may be detained?—Yes.

736. Are you satisfied with the arrangements you found existing for the accommodation of lunatics in those establishments?—No; they are very insufficient.

737. In what respects?—First and foremost, the rooms are exceedingly small; they are ill-ventilated. There is no convenience whatever, either for the comfort or safe custody of the lunatics. The yards attached to what are called the "insane cells," in those workhouses are very restricted and gloomy, without a current of air. About the year 1848, I wrote to the Poor Law Commissioners on the subject. At that time the poorhouses were beginning to be so much crowded by paupers that they could not interfere, or give any additional accommodation then.

738. Have you since brought the matter under their notice?—Not in the same form, inasmuch as we have been building and increasing asylums.

739. Were the portions of the workhouses where the insane are detained built expressly for the reception of lunatics?—Yes, they were built originally as idiot wards, but from the pressure that came upon these poorhouses for accommodation, the idiot wards were converted to the general use, and the idiots were diffused through the house as the case might be.

Idiot wards.

740. Then, in point of fact, the idiot wards, as you call them, do not on all occasions contain the whole of the lunatics who may be in the establishment?—No.

741. Is it not injurious that idiots or lunatics should be mixed with the same inmates?—I think it is, and I am of opinion they should not be so mixed, because idiots are liable to be molested and annoyed by the thoughtless in poorhouses.

742. Have you found that the lunatics have frequently been placed under restraint in the workhouses?—The very places themselves constitute places of restraint, the cells in which they are lodged being very narrow and miserable.

Treatment of lunatics in work-houses.

743. I mean mechanical restraint?—Yes, I have seen them under mechanical restraint; I would not say they have habitual recourse to it in poorhouses.

744. From your observation do you consider that they are treated with humanity and kindness, or otherwise, by those in charge of the workhouses?—From my observation I do not think they are sufficiently clad, or fed, or sufficiently looked after. I cannot say they are cruelly treated, but I can say they are not sufficiently well treated.

745. Are those who are assigned for their attendance persons who are familiar with the treatment of lunatics?—No. In fact they have no persons assigned for their attendance except, perhaps, some of the paupers in the workhouse; and to encourage these poor people to be attentive to the idiots placed under their care, I have frequently urged that such persons should get some additional recompense. I found, however, that they could not receive a recompense in money, and, therefore, I proposed that they should get tea, and bread and butter, and such things, in consideration of their attention.

746. Has that suggestion been generally adopted?—In some instances, but not in others.

747. Do you consider that sufficient care, in a medical point of view, is given to lunatics detained in workhouses?—Yes; I think the medical men generally pay them a great deal of attention, in many instances putting them on extra diet.

748. Do you consider that a workhouse is an establishment in which the cure of lunatics is likely to be effected?—No; I think workhouses are not conducive to recovery.

749. Do you find many cases of insanity, i.e., violent patients, detained in workhouses who ought to go into asylums?—Yes. When a case becomes very violent or dangerous in a workhouse, application is generally made to the district asylum, if there is room to admit the case; and it very often occurs that the guardians of the immediate poorhouse have individuals committed to prison as dangerous lunatics for security sake, in order to have them removed the more certainly and the quicker to the district asylum.

750. Do you feel it your duty, on inspecting these institutions, to note down the cases which are fit for removal to asylums?—Yes. Very frequently when I go into a poorhouse and see a very urgent case, I write over to the district asylum, stating the particulars, and beg the manager to make preparations, and send an admission for the party.

751. Have you ever recommended the employment of paid attendants for insane wards in poorhouses?—Never.

752. Is there any special dietary for the inmates of insane wards in workhouses?—No, Dietary. it varies, because the physician to the workhouse has the authority to put any patient he pleases on extra diet. Now it so happens that in most instances—at least in a great number of instances—the physicians in these poorhouses put the inmate that are in them upon something better than the common diet, but it is not obligatory on them to do so, it is a voluntary act on their part, and is done in some places, but not in others.

753. What arrangements have you and your colleagues made for the regular visitation of workhouses?—On an average, I think we go both to the workhouses certainly in the course of a year and a half or two. When we go to the neighbourhood of a workhouse we visit it. I made a general visitation of the workhouses in Ireland some years ago.

houses by the

754. Will you furnish a return of the workhouses visited by yourself and your colleagues during the last twelve months?—Yes.

755. Upon visiting workhouses, do you enter your observations in any book in the place?—No; there is no book of visitations. If there is any thing particular, that I think should be called attention to, I generally write a letter. There is a rough book for persons going in and out, in which I have made occasional remarks.

756. After visiting workhouses are you in the habit of making any reports to the Poor Law Commissioners?—No.

757. The communications made by you are to the authorities of the workhouses?—To the local authorities.

758. Are those communications confined to entries in the visitor's book to which you have referred?—Yes, with the exceptions I have stated. If I find the same attention paid as heretofore, I see nothing of importance to note one way or the other, because it would tend to no good. If we found the asylum of a district sufficiently large, then we would have drafted to it some of the lunatics.

759. But, as places of detention for the insane, are not lunatic wards in workhouse places which you are bound to inspect with the view to their proper management?—Yes, we are expected to visit them, but not at any particular periods; I mean that we are not to pay a particular number of visits within a certain period.

760. Your inspection also extends to the various gaols in Ireland?—Yes.

761. Do you also visit bridewells?—No, lunatics are never detained in them.

762. District holdwells?—No, it would be illegal to send a dangerous lunatic to the bridewell.

763. Do you also visit the public prisons?—I visited Spike Island frequently, and the convict prisons here.

764. Do you consider that you should pay annual visits to each of these institutions?—No, it is not a duty. I have gone occasionally, having heard there were lunatics in them, and also having heard, in some cases, that there was no doubt as to the sanity of the persons, and I went to examine them.

765. What have you generally found to be the nature of the arrangements made in gaols with reference to lunatics?—Well, I think, on the whole, considering the constitution of gaols, that every attention is paid to lunatics in them, and every care taken of them.

766. Are they confined in separate wards?—No; where there are a large number I think you will always find them congregated together; but if there are only one or two dangerous lunatics, I have often seen the patients with the general class of better conducted prisoners.

767. Are they disposed of according to the gaol classification of prisoners before trial, and prisoners after trial, or are they disposed of with reference to their conduct as lunatics, and therefore kept in separate wards?—Yes, it depends upon their conduct as lunatics.

768. As regards the classes of lunatics confined in gaols, do you feel it your duty to report those who may be qualified for admission to the asylums?—The way in which we do that is this. We get a return of every lunatic who is sent to prison immediately after he is committed to prison, with an account of the character, and history, and nature of his insanity. We also get returns weekly, or, as the case may be, from the different asylums, stating what vacancies may or may not be in them; and then as we find vacancies, and as we find lunatics in the prisons, we write down for the commitment of the persons placed in the prisons as dangerous lunatics, and have them transferred to district asylums.

769. Such lunatics are removed by an order from the Lord Lieutenant?—Yes.

770. And would, therefore, be admitted into the asylum without any interposition on the part of the Governors?—Yes, without any interposition on their part.

771. Are the lunatics in gaols kept upon the ordinary gaol diet, or do they receive extra diet?—It depends upon the medical man who visits the gaol; it is discretionary with him.

772. Have cases come under your knowledge of lunatics being detained in gaols for long periods?—Yes, for very long periods.

773. What is the greatest length of time you have known a lunatic to be detained in gaol?—I have known a lunatic to be detained in gaol over eight years.

774. How did that arise?—Where a case is a very chronic one, and becomes tranquil, we think it quite ridiculous to send that to a district asylum, to occupy a place which may be used better for a curable case; and, besides, the committing magistrate has the power quite as much as any other authority, to send such a party out of gaol as soon as he ceases to be dangerous.

775. What is the practice in cases of persons becoming insane while under sentence or waiting for trial; whose duty is it to report such cases, and within what period?—The gaol authorities report to us, stating the circumstances, and we communicate with the Government. If a man is merely accused of a crime and is not indicted, we have him removed to a district asylum, where he remains until he recovers, and when he recovers, we intimate to the Government that such a person is recovered, and we have him sent back to prison to stand his trial.

776. And in cases of parties under sentence, are they not remitted back, upon recovery, to undergo the remainder of their sentence?—Yes, but we do not send them to the district asylums. What we do with parties who become insane subsequent to condemnation, is to have them removed to the Central Asylum. As soon as his period of imprisonment terminates, he no longer is a fit subject to remain in the Central Asylum, and is discharged, or if he recovers in the interval, before the expiration of the sentence, we send him back. I will state a case for example. There was a man, about a month ago, discharged as quite well; his period of legal imprisonment would be a year longer, but we stated the matter to the Lord Lieutenant, and he said to discharge him at once and remit the year.

in gaols.*

777. Have you found that many of the cases of lunatics in gaol have been recent acute cases?—Yes, and I have known a great number of cases sent to gaol recovering in gaol. The system of isolation in gaol, and the absence of the previous excitement, produces a good effect.

778. What is your opinion as to the state of the law with reference to the commitment of dangerous lunatics?—I think the law, if properly acted on, is a very good one, considering the deficiency of lunatic accommodation in Ireland; I think, if strictly acted upon, it is a necessary law; but there is great laxity on the part of magistrates in committing lunatics to gaol. They do not examine sufficiently into the antecedents of the case; and if a person comes and swears that A. B. is a dangerous lunatic, they do not take proper precautions in the matter, and are not particular enough.

779. Is the commitment of a dangerous lunatic accompanied with a medical certificate as to the state of his mind?—Yes.

780. On visiting the gaols, do you examine these documents?—Generally—always indeed.

781. What is your opinion upon the question of sending persons, becoming insane after commitment for felonies and misdemeanours, to the district asylums?—I think it is a proper course to adopt, because you have no right to consider a man accused of a crime as having perpetrated the crime, until it is proved.

782. Have you found that the amendment of the law with regard to the commitment of dangerous lunatics, in the Act of 1845, has checked the improper practice which prevailed with reference to the commitment of dangerous lunatics indiscriminately?—It may in some measure. It is a subject on which I corresponded with the Government a good deal about six or seven years ago. I recollect one time we had 560 lunatics in gaol.

783. Does the medical officer of a prison enter in any book any observations, with respect to the lunacy cases, as distinct from other prisoners?—Yes, he treats them as a separate class.

784. Can you furnish a return of the gaols visited by the Inspectors during the present year?—Yes, I will do so.

785. How are dangerous lunatics, who may be committed to prison, discharged, should they become sane?—If a dangerous lunatic becomes sane, or ceases to be dangerous in prison, any of the committing magistrates has the power of discharging him. If he becomes sane, or if he is to be discharged from the district asylum, if transferred from the gaol to the asylum, it rests altogether with the Board, and there is no application to the committing magistrate. The jurisdiction of the committing magistrate ceases as soon as the case leaves the gaol.

786. Is it in the power of the Lord Lieutenant, and is it the practice to transfer insane persons, who have been committed to gaol as dangerous lunatics, to district asylums, after they have ceased to be dangerous in the gaols?—Certainly, for this reason. A man may be a very dangerous lunatic to-day, and as soon as he is put into gaol, the very fact of his isolation in that gaol, and of the control exercised over him, may make him, within twenty-four hours, to all intents and purposes, quiet, and in that state of quietness, it is as much within the authority of the Lord Lieutenant to send him to gaol as if he had been breaking windows or doing other violence. He is in the prison under the recognition, so far as the Lord Lieutenant is concerned, of being a dangerous lunatic. As long as the interference of the Lord Lieutenant or of the State is required, they regard him in his original condition of a dangerous lunatic.

787. When a dangerous lunatic, who has been confined in gaol, has ceased to be of unsound mind, or ceased to be a dangerous lunatic, is it the practice of the Governor to notify that to the committing magistrate or to the Inspector, or both?—He very often notifies it to the committing magistrates, and the committing magistrates very often refuse to interfere. They say, "No, we do not like to let the person out." I myself applied to committing magistrates, saying, "I think so and so is a tranquil case, he is doing no good in the house, or he is recovering, and you might let him out;" many of the magistrates say "We will not take upon us the responsibility of letting parties out; let them go to the asylum, and let it be certified there they are recovering, and send them out." I have known many, from a scrupulous feeling, unwilling to take upon themselves the responsibility I state.

788. But does not the law give the Lord Lieutenant the power to discharge in such a case?—Yes, or the assistant barrister, or the going judge of assize.

789. I believe there has been a Central Asylum erected, of late years, for criminal lunatics?—Yes.

790. I believe the criminal lunatics who may be detained in that asylum are persons indicted or acquitted, on the ground of insanity, at the time of the commission of the crime, or who have been found insane at the time of their indictment?—According to the 26th section of the Act, such is the case.

791. I believe persons under sentence of imprisonment or transportation, who have become insane, may also be removed to that asylum by order of the Lord Lieutenant?—Yes.

792. Have the commitments to the Central Asylum been strictly confined to those classes?—They have.

Inspector of Lunatic Asylums—General Store of Asylums and Lunatics.

J. Nugent, Esq., M.D.,
its working.

793. By whom are the rules and regulations for that asylum framed?—They were submitted by the Inspectors and approved of by the Lord Lieutenant in Council.

794. Are there other Governors appointed for the management of the institution?—No, the Inspectors have the sole control and management.

795. How long has the institution been in operation?—Six years.

796. Are you satisfied of the advantage of having such an establishment?—Perfectly.

797. By whom are the officers and servants of that establishment appointed?—By Government.

798. How is the medical attendance of the institution provided for?—There is a visiting and resident physician—the resident physician being the Governor.

799. How often does the visiting physician attend the asylum?—He attends alternate days, and whenever necessary; two or three times in the day if required.

800. Who selects the patients who may be transferred from the gaols to those asylums? Originally, on the opening of the asylum, a list of all that came under the category of criminal was submitted to Government by the Inspectors, stating the particular crimes of which the lunatics had been accused, and also giving a short abstract or history of their insanity, of their conduct, and of other matters, which might direct Government in the selection of the cases to be sent to the asylum.

801. When vacancies occur in the Central Criminal Asylum, is preference given to any particular class of cases?—Yes, to cases of a serious character; persons charged with murder, violent assaults, and such like offences, are selected and sent there.

802. Is a preference, therefore, given to the cases of heinous crimes, rather than of aggravated lunacy?—Yes. At the same time, where individuals show aggravated and dangerous symptoms, though their crimes have not been very bad, they have been transferred to the asylum as a safe place of custody.

803. In cases where lunatics have recovered in the asylum, what steps have been taken with regard to such patients?—The Inspectors intimate to Government, when they are satisfied of the absolute recovery of a party, with a recommendation to the Government as to the course it would be judicious to adopt in his regard.

804. Are there any cases of removal from the Central Criminal Asylum to district asylums?—No, we have not done that as yet.

805. What cases do you consider should be so removed legally?—Suppose it was a person, we will say, belonging to the county of Kilkenny committed for an offence, and that he was to be transported for seven years; if at the expiration of the seven years, part of the time being spent in a lunatic asylum, he still continued to be insane, that person should be sent to his native district.

806. Under what provision of the law?—The law gives authority to the Lord Lieutenant or Government, to detain the individual in a lunatic asylum only so long as the period of his imprisonment exists. After that he is to be discharged.

807. Does your answer refer to a case, where the period of the sentence having expired, the party still remains a lunatic?—Yes.

808. Suppose a person, originally committed to the Central Asylum, having been acquitted on the ground of insanity, and that such person is eventually cured, what would be the course of proceeding then?—The course of proceeding we have adopted in such cases is, to recommend the man to be sent back to prison. In other instances we have recommended that he should be discharged, and a free pardon granted. We have had, I think, ten instances in which we discharged persons from the Criminal Asylum; one of them was sent back to prison, the others got free pardons. These were for heinous offences. The last case we discharged was that of a man, named Dormody, in the county of Tipperary, who, in a fit of excitement, killed his child. In other cases, where females, after parturition, had destroyed their children, we have so acted where they were married women; they were labouring under puerperal mania.

809. Am I to understand, that a class of persons have been discharged who have never really been tried?—No; I mean to say, that if a person was not tried—being incompetent to plead, and to be put upon trial—what we have done in various cases of the kind was, to keep the persons over until they were competent to plead, and we have had three instances in which we succeeded in getting capital convictions, though the parties had been before insane.

810. Are those persons always sent to the Central Asylum, or are they ever sent to the district asylum?—The only instance in which a man got into the Central Asylum under similar circumstances, that is, a man untried, was one, the history of whose case we could not discover. He was a Roscommon man, named Quirk, which in Irish means "Cair," and he had gone by both names. We could never find, on reference to the proper documents, whether he was tried or not, the crime having been committed seventeen years ago. Last year we sent him down to Roscommon to stand his trial, and the bills were ignored by the Grand Jury. There was another case of an untried man, sent to Cork to be tried. These were the only two instances of persons being incompetent to plead who were ever brought to Dundrum.

811. What is the course generally pursued with regard to persons who have been found incompetent to plead, owing to insanity?—They have been sent to the district asylum, regarding them as not criminal lunatics until the crime is proved.

812. Such is the interpretation given to the law?—Such is the interpretation given to the law; but they are sent back to the district asylum, on the distinct understanding that as soon as they recover, they are not to be discharged, but sent back to prison.

Proceeding in reference to persons incompetent to plead.

813. Are any persons tried and acquitted on the ground of insanity, or who become insane under sentence, in district asylums?—Yes; some for very small offences. For example, there was a case, a very short time ago, of a man who was tried for exposing his person. That man was acquitted on the score of insanity: he was sent to a district asylum.

814. You do not consider that the law is mandatory as regards the transmission of such cases to the Central Asylum?—I am quite sure it is not mandatory, and that is the opinion, I believe, of the principal law officers of the Crown. The rules and regulations of the Central Criminal Asylum were submitted to the Lord Chancellor, to Mr. Brewster, and the principal law officers. They consider that under the Dendrum Asylum Act, the Lord Lieutenant could send patients back from the Dendrum Asylum to the district asylums.

815. Has it been the practice to discharge, unconditionally, lunatics who may have recovered, but who have been originally charged with heinous offences, such as murder and manslaughter, and acquitted on the ground of insanity?—Yes; the second case I have in the paper before me is that of "Desmody, convalescent, homicide of child." The offence was committed in April, 1847. He has been discharged. If he was sane when tried, it would have been a simple case of homicide.

816. As far as you know, has that practice been attended with injurious results, or otherwise?—It has not been attended with injurious results.

817. When such cases present themselves at the Central Asylum, do you immediately make a report to the Lord Lieutenant on the subject?—Yes; we make a report to the Lord Lieutenant prior to the reception of the patients.

818. When a criminal lunatic at Dendrum recovers, do you make a special report to the Lord Lieutenant on the case?—We specially report to the Lord Lieutenant on the case, as soon as we are satisfied the recovery is fixed.

819. Are there any cases at present in the Dendrum Asylum of that character?—Yes, there are three or four. I would not pronounce them altogether recovered. If they were not criminals, I should have no hesitation in dismissing them from the asylum; but we generally like half a year to test their condition.

820. Are there any cases which, notwithstanding their being perfectly recovered, it has been considered proper, for various reasons, to retain still in the asylum?—Yes; I will just give a case. I have a man ordered, "generally inoffensive, intelligent, occasionally, however, very irritable." He is son to a respectable gentleman. I would not allow that man to go out, though he is as rational as I am.

821. Are there any cases of females committed while labouring under puerperal mania?—Yes, there are some.

822. Cases where the patients have recovered?—Yes.

823. How are these cases generally dealt with?—If the individual happens to be a married woman, the case is different from that of a prostitute or an unmarried person, and I think that many of this immediate class ought not to be placed in a lunatic asylum: they are sent there through the benevolence of the judge or the jury. As to married women, I should have no hesitation in recommending, that after the lapse of six or eight months, they should be sent back to their families. We have so acted in two or three instances. The other cases I regard with doubt.

824. Have you had to consider on these occasions the propriety, or otherwise, of allowing a criminal lunatic, when recovered, to return to the scene of his crime?—We do not interfere with them. We have no control over them when they are discharged, and we think it would be injudicious to throw doubt upon them by any after interference.

825. Has it ever been made a condition with such lunatics, in discharging them, that they should expatriate themselves?—Yes, we made it conditional with one man who came under our notice, about the time of the opening of the asylum, that he should go to America. He was wrecked on the coast of Ireland, but was honourable and honest enough, when he could not fulfil his engagement, to come back and place himself under our protection. We kept him for two or three years in the asylum as a sort of servant. He is now gone back to his family, and is a quiet, well-conducted character.

826. Are the inmates of the Dendrum Asylum, in any cases, classified or accommodated with reference to their station in life and their education?—No; there is no marked distinction. There is a Roman Catholic clergyman there, who, unfortunately, killed two children; he is allowed to wear his own clothes.

827. Are the friends of any inmates of the Dendrum Asylum permitted to supply them with luxuries?—No; but when you visit the asylum, you will find that they are treated with every possible kindness.

828. To whom is the classification of the inmates left?—To the physician.

829. Do the Inspectors exercise any control?—Yes; we visit frequently for that purpose.

830. Are the friends of the inmates allowed access generally to the asylums?—Yes; and they are allowed to correspond with them. Every liberty is permitted, and with good results.

831. What is your opinion as to the policy of making a distinction between different classes of lunatics?—Well, I think in the case of the higher class, it would be a very great cruelty to place them on a similar footing with the lower classes in a criminal asylum; it would be adding punishment to their confinement. The object of the Government is the safe custody of the individual, and the protection of society, and not, as I think, to punish a man who is insane. So far as the distinctions, in a social point of view, between patients, go, I think it would be fair to allow the benefit of them in a public institution. They have not seen the necessity of such a distinction being as yet made in the Dundrum Asylum, and it is not done except in the outward dress of the patients.

832. Are those who have recovered their reason still associated with the insane?—No; perfect liberty is given about the grounds, and they are almost all allowed separate rooms. Every consideration is shown to them.

833. How often is the institution visited by the Inspectors?—We make an official visit once a month, and I suppose scarcely a fortnight in the year elapses but we go there.

834. Is that official visit made without notice?—The official visit is on the first Monday of every month. On that day we meet the physician, the apothecary, and the different persons in the establishment, and see how matters are going on. It is merely for the purpose of comparing notes, as it were; but at other times we go out frequently to see how the asylum is attended to.

835. Does the Dundrum Asylum afford sufficient accommodation for all classes of criminal lunatics who may by law be confined there?—If the law was stretched to its full extent, I should say not; but I think it affords ample accommodation for the exigencies of the country.

836. Having expressed an opinion that certain classes of criminal lunatics, who are charged with minor offences, may properly be confined in district asylums, are you of opinion that the Dundrum Asylum affords adequate accommodation or not for the classes that ought to be properly detained there?—After six years' experience of it, I should say it does.

837. That opinion is, I presume, based upon the fact that there are not detained in gaols lunatics of a class who ought to be removed to some such asylum?—I consider the asylum meets all the exigencies of the country.

Chaplains.

838. Are chaplains attached to the institution?—Yes.

839. Are you satisfied of the importance of such officers being attached to that asylum?—I believe (and the resident physician is of the same opinion) that if there were not chaplains attached to the Dundrum Asylum, that institution could not get on satisfactorily. They possess a great moral influence over the insane generally.

The Hardwicke Cells.

840. In addition to the inspection of district lunatic asylums, workhouses, gaols, and the Central Asylum, do you also visit the lunatic wards in the Houses of Industry, where they exist?—Yes; the only such institutions now remaining are the Hardwicke cells and the Lifford lunatic wards.

841. How often is that inspection made?—Well, I have been three or four times at the Hardwicke cells within a year.

842. Do you enter notes in any book as to the result of your inspection?—No; except something worthy of notice occurs.

843. Is there any memorandum of the fact of your visit entered in any of the books of the institution?—I do not always make an entry.

844. In case you may observe any thing that requires amendment, what steps do you take to bring it to the notice of the proper authorities?—Well, generally, I have called upon Dr. Stewart, who is the head of the House of Industry, and spoken to him on the subject. I adopt that course as the fairest and most certain way of obtaining the object required.

845. Have you communicated yourself with a verbal communication to Dr. Stewart?—I have occasionally written, and sometimes communicated verbally.

846. Have you been in the habit of reporting to the Poor Law Commissioners, or calling their attention to such irregularities?—I cannot say many irregularities existed of that nature that I thought it necessary to bring under the notice of the Poor Law Commissioners. On a late occasion Dr. White wrote to Dr. Stewart to the effect that he would communicate with the Poor Law Commissioners in reference to certain matters.

The medical attendance.

847. Are the arrangements for the medical attendance on the lunatics in those cells satisfactory?—Well, I should think so; there are many competent gentlemen attending.

848. Are you aware how often they attend?—I know that in the one that was more immediately connected with us, they need to attend daily. That was the Island-bridge, but I cannot tell whether they visit daily or not at the Hardwicke cells.

849. The Island-bridge no longer exists?—It no longer exists.

850. Are you aware what are the duties of the medical attendant to the Hardwicke lunatic cells?—To visit the patients. All the cases there are incurable. I should say his visit to them is more with regard to general diseases, than from any sanitary object in reference to the mind.

851. Have you made it the subject of inquiry, how frequently his visits have been paid?—I presume they are paid three times a week.

852. Is it or not, so far as you are aware, the duty of the medical attendant to visit periodically for the purpose of ascertaining the general health of the patients, or to limit his visits to cases which are brought specially under his notice by the superintendent or matron as requiring medical treatment?—No; I see he visits the wards indiscriminately, looking to all the patients, and not restricting himself to any particular case.

853. Do you know whether he makes any report annually, or periodically, upon the sanitary state of the institution?—He reports to the Poor Law Board.

854. Do you consider the Hardwicke cells a proper place for the confinement of lunatics at present?—No. I was always opposed to them.

855. What arrangements do you consider might be made for the disposal of those

a sketch of the patients?—I had a long series of communication with the Under Secretary on the subject, and I suggested one of two things. I proposed to him for the Inspectors to take an establishment which would be sufficiently large for the lunatics there; to get a staff to look after the lunatics, and to have them together under our control, and to apply for the cost of their maintenance, through the Under Secretary's Office, to Government, we sending in, of course, a statement of the expenditure to the Under Secretary for the Audit Office; or if that was not agreeable to the Government, I proposed the lunatics should be placed under the care of some respectable persons, who should erect an institution perfectly suitable for them, and that the Inspectors should have the supervision of the place, that the Inspectors should establish the dietary, should constitute the staff, and have the management of the institution, Government paying, in round numbers, so much per head.

856. If there were room in the Richmond Asylum, would you have them removed to that place?—Yes; but there is not room.

857. And when so removed, would they be treated as lunatics belonging to the district?—No, Government pays for them.

858. Are there not some endowed institutions for the reception of the insane which are subject to your inspection?—Yes.

859. How many of those institutions?—Two—Swift's Hospital and the Bloomfield Retreat.

860. How often in the year do you inspect Swift's Hospital?—Four or five times in the year.

861. Is that an hospital for the reception of lunatic poor merely?—No, it is a mixed hospital for the poor—those who are on the foundation, and paying patients.

862. Are there any rules or regulations for the government of that hospital?—Yes; it belongs to a corporation appointed by Act of Parliament, which regulate the institution.

863. On what terms are paying patients admitted into that institution?—Prior to Sir Edward Sugden being Lord Chancellor, the payments varied. It was upwards of £100 a-year or £150; but Sir Edward Sugden thought it would be more advisable to have different scales of payment, and, I believe, the fixed scale is forty guineas, gradually coming down to five guineas. The institution contains 150 patients—75 males and 75 females.

864. Are you satisfied with the manner in which that institution is conducted?—Perfectly.

865. Do you think it might, consistently with the intention of the founders, be rendered more available for the treatment of the lunatic poor?—It has been, because there have been bequests to it which increase the receipts, and the accommodation has been enlarged.

866. How many are there in Swift's Hospital, really poor patients, who pay nothing?—I should say they come near one-half the entire number.

867. Are those cases that would be proper subjects for admission to district lunatic asylums?—No; because they are of the better, but reduced, classes of society—such, for instance, as clergymen, or the relatives of clergymen.

868. Are they cases that would not be admitted into the district asylums, except as paying patients?—Some of them are so poor, that they should be admitted into district asylums; but the object of the institution is, with the surplus money received, to extend its advantages. The funds are about £3,000 a-year, and they desire to admit as many as possible of the more respectable, but indigent, members of society. I am happy to say, that I think they will have an addition this year to their property of about £500 a-year.

869. Have the regulations made some years since with reference to the admission of patients into Swift's Hospital had the effect of increasing the number of poor patients or of the other class?—The number of patients who were admitted free is diminished, but the institution has been more generally opened for the benefit of parties with restricted means, and who, having such restricted means, could not send their insane relatives to private asylums.

870. Has the alteration had the effect of placing a greater amount of income at the disposal of the Governors?—No, a diminished amount; so, at least, I understand.

871. The alteration, therefore, has prevented a like relief being afforded to indigent lunatics?—Yes.

872. Do you believe that the effect of the change has been that persons in reduced circumstances have been sent to that hospital, who would otherwise have been sent to licensed houses?—Yes.

873. Has the number of inmates in the institution increased since the alteration of the rules?—No, I do not think there is any variation in the number.

874. Is the hospital at present full?—There were three vacancies when I was there last.

875. Are the forms of order, admission, and the medical certificates relative to paying patients, the same in Swift's Hospital as those required in the case of licensed houses?—Yes. A party wishing to get a relative into the asylum, applies to the Board, with whom the admission rests altogether, and who are a corporate body; the sum to be paid is arranged, and a bond is entered into for its payment. The patient to be admitted must be duly certified to be a fit case by two medical men, and the authority of the person placing him in the asylum must be clear, as in the case of licensed houses, under the 5th and 6th Victoria, chap. 123.

876. Do you feel it necessary, on inspection, to ascertain that these orders, or certificates, are correct?—Yes. The peculiarity in Swift's Hospital is this—all the other asylums send copies of orders and certificates to our office; but this being an establishment with a specific charter, they do not do so, but when we go to the asylum we see those things. The practice is that they are not sent.

877. What are the arrangements with regard to the medical attendance at Swift's Hospital?—At present two physicians attend—Dr. Cusack and Dr. Croker go on alternate days.

878. Is the resident manager a physician?—No, he is a non-professional person.

879. Are the visits of the physicians required by the rules to be made at stated periods, and how often?—Either of them visit every day.

880. Is a record kept of their visits?—Yes.

881. Do you make an entry of your visits in the books of the institution?—No, not always; we have no control; we merely visit and examine. We have constant correspondence with them in regard to individual patients. We examine the patients, and see those who are in it.

882. Do you make any report to any person or any body with reference to this institution?—No; we have no report to make. We meet the Board occasionally, and if we see any thing wrong, our power is simply to state that; and I must say I never see any thing objectionable.

883. When you have occasion to call attention to any matters, which you consider may require amendment, to whom do you address your representation?—The fact is, I never had occasion to find fault with any thing whatsoever as to the treatment of the patients. There were one or two instances of patients, as to whose sanity I had some doubt; I spoke to the medical men attending, and had their opinion upon the subject.

884. Have you any power of directing the discharge of patients?—No, except that we may report, if we think a patient is not insane. We have the same authority then to enter a report on the subject, so as to notify to the Board what we think.

885. Would you feel it necessary to report such a case to the Lord Chancellor or any other authority, if the Governors did not take notice of your recommendation?—Certainly.

886. Have such cases ever occurred?—Never.

887. What are the arrangements made for attendance on religious worship in the institution?—One of the Governors is a clergyman of the Established Church, and he officiates every Sunday, and constantly attends. and the Roman Catholic patients are sent out every Sunday, in company with an attendant, to the nearest place of worship; and when a patient is ill, no matter what his condition, a clergyman is sent for.

888. Is it usual in this asylum, or any other of the asylums, for the person performing divine worship to preach to the inmates?—Yes.

889. May it not be the case, that some inmates, whose mania may have a religious tendency, would be injuriously affected by such preaching?—I do not know that such a thing is possible. I have gone very often from curiosity both to church and chapel, to satisfy my own mind on the subject, and to see how the patients behaved. They may not altogether understand what is said, but no congregation can be better behaved.

890. I believe the Privy Council regulation, with reference to chaplains, directs controversial subjects to be studiously avoided?—Certainly.

891. Have you reason to believe that rule has been faithfully observed by the chaplains?—Yes, it has been constantly observed.

892. In case a clergyman should violate that rule of the Privy Council, while preaching at a period of public service, are there any of the officers in the institution whose duty it would be to record such a departure from the regulation?—Certainly.

893. As a general rule, do you consider the patients who are afflicted with religious mania should be allowed to attend the sermons of chaplains?—The religious mania, with some persons, does not at all tend to a controversial character so much as to the exercise of piety. I do not see how an attendance on Protestant, Presbyterian, or Roman Catholic worship—they being services to which the patients are respectively accustomed—can at all excite them. Then as to the sermons, any discourse upon the common principles of benevolence and good behavior, without reference to any question of doctrinal difference, cannot fail to be beneficial, because experience will tell you that a religious monomania of an intractable character is a very rare disease.

894. With reference to your not reporting upon such institutions as Swift's Hospital, have you ever considered the provisions of the 56th section of the Prisons Act?—That function the Inspectors have drawn in a great measure from the Act; but the obligation is not imposed upon them.

895. Is it not provided by the 8th and 9th Vic., cap. 107, that the Inspectors shall undertake and perform all the duties which the Inspectors-General of Prisons were to perform, under the Act to which I have referred?—You will find, for example, that the Inspectors of Prisons are called upon to send the different Grand Juries their reports, for which they get twenty guineas. If we send to the Grand Juries, of course we ought to get twenty guineas each for our reports. We report only to the Lord Lieutenant. The reports the Inspectors have sent to the Lord Lieutenant, and to each Grand Jury every year, show the expenditure in every lunatic asylum.

896. I believe the Inspectors do not now furnish the Grand Juries with detailed reports upon each institution chargeable upon the county?—No; they report for the information of the Government, and send the different Grand Juries, twice a year, the amount of the expenditure and every thing connected with it. When we send in our report to the Lord Lieutenant, we have done our duty, and then the Queen may order our report to be printed. Each Grand Jury, every half year, sends a deputation to examine the asylum, and report to it.

Duty of Inspectors as to reports.

897. Do your reports to the Lord Lieutenant always contain a report upon Swift's Hospital?—We report generally upon the state of private asylums, including that, and give statistical details.

898. You have referred to another institution, the Bloomfield Retreat; what is the nature of that foundation?—That foundation is something similar to Swift's, in which poor patients pay nothing, and are received and supported upon the surplus funds of those who pay.

899. Is it confined to any particular religious sect?—I think it altogether belongs to the members of the Society of Friends, and members of the Established Church.

900. Are the forms of admission, and the medical certificates as to paying patients, the same as in private asylums?—Yes.

901. Do you satisfy yourself, on inspection, these are properly arranged?—Yes.

902. Do you make any report on the institution?—Not individually; we include it in the general report upon private asylums.

903. Are you in the habit of recording your visits in any book belonging to the institution?—Yes, I record my visits very frequently, but not one-half of them.

904. Are you satisfied with the manner in which that institution is conducted?—Perfectly.

905. Your inspection also extends to private licensed houses, under the 5th and 6th Vic., cap. 123?—Yes.

906. How many of these licensed houses are there at present in Ireland?—Thirteen.

907. Do you consider that the provision of the law affords sufficient security, for none but suitable private establishments being licensed for the reception of lunatics?—No, I do not think the law is sufficiently stringent. There are asylums here that I think might be very much improved, if there were stronger rules.

908. Do you consider that the magistrates at sessions have sufficient materials before them, to judge of the propriety or otherwise of granting a licence?—I do.

909. What materials are before the magistrates on these occasions?—The reports of the Inspectors.

910. Upon what points?—Upon the general condition of the asylums.

911. I speak now previous to the original licences being granted; what report is made in that case to the justices?—I am not aware of any new asylums having been opened in my time, except one in Kilkenny. I went down and inspected that, and found it suitable. It closed in about two years afterwards. A gentleman wrote to me the other day, saying he wished to open an asylum at Belfast. I went down and inspected it, and reported that I thought it a very unfit place.

912. In the cases to which you refer, the houses were not occupied by inmates at the period of your report?—No.

913. Does the law require any such report to be laid before magistrates?—No.

914. Does the law require any report to be laid before the magistrates previous to the renewal of the licence?—Yes.

915. Am I to understand that the law requires a report from the Inspector to be laid before the justices, independently of those observations which he may, from time to time, have made in the visiting book of the house, and which, by law, must be sent to the Clerk of the Peace?—No.

916. Should any thing, therefore, have occurred between the period of the last visitation of the Inspector and the period of renewing the licence to render the establishment unfit for the reception of lunatics, the magistrates would be in ignorance of the fact?—Yes.

917. How long a period may elapse between the last visit of the Inspector and the time for licensing?—The Inspectors are called upon to visit every asylum twice a year. That is what the law requires to be done. It does not specify any particular period when they are to inspect or not to inspect; but the habit of the Inspectors invariably is—at least my practice has been—to go to these asylums and see them, and immediately, a month or two before the period of taking out the licence, to give my opinion.

918. By a record in the visiting book?—Yes.

919. Have you ever known the magistrates refuse the renewal of a licence?—No.

920. Have you ever attended Quarter Sessions yourself, and communicated with the magistrates with reference to granting licences?—I did; I went voluntarily myself.

921. Did the magistrates act upon your representations on that occasion?—They did.

922. To what effect was your representation?—It had reference to a private asylum with which I was very discontented. There were a number of low-paying patients in it, the Quarter Sessions before last. It was not absolutely so bad as to call upon me to request the magistrates to close it, though it was bad enough, and I had no other place where I could put the unfortunate people. I went to the magistrates and spoke to them, in order that they should give the proprietor a lecture on the subject.

923. You did not recommend the revocation of the licence?—I did not.

924. Do you consider it a reason why the licence should be renewed, that, from one cause or another, the friends of the lunatics may experience difficulties in providing for them elsewhere?—Why, it would form an ingredient in my calculation.

925. Do you not consider the granting licences to unfit establishments upon that ground, has a tendency to prevent the improvement of such institutions?—I think it would, if you were to grant it to one absolutely unfit; but an establishment may be approaching to unfitness, and still you would not like to take the extreme course of closing it.

926. Do you think that the private asylums, thirteen in number, are perfectly fit for the reception of lunatics?—I am disposed to think so, as I know that a most perceptible and undoubted improvement is taking place, and has taken place, in them within the last four years.

927. I believe the law requires a plan of the building to be hung up in the institution?—Yes.

928. Is a copy of that plan obliged to be furnished to the magistrates whenever a licence is applied for?—I do not think it is; but if there is any alteration they do produce it.

929. Should not the plan accompany each application for a licence?—If there is any alteration, it should then.

930. Does not the fifth section of the licensing act on private asylums, require that the notice of application for the licence shall be accompanied by the plan of each house?—I believe that refers to the first application.

931. The law does not limit it to the first application?—It has been always read as such by magistrates and authorities.

932. In cases where additions have been made to a licensed house, is the plan required to be given to the Clerk of the Peace after the completion of such addition?—Yes.

933. Do you consider that the plan to be hung up in the house should contain or show the additions when completed?—Yes.

934. Would you consider it an irregularity if the plan hung up did not contain an accurate delineation of the premises as they then stood?—Yes.

935. Does the plan specify the rooms which are to be occupied by the patients?—No, I do not think it does—it specifies, but it does not specify by what patients.

936. Does it specify the rooms that are to be occupied by the keeper of the establishment himself and his family, as distinct from those that are to be appropriated to the patients?—I do not think the Act calls upon the individuals to do it.

937. How far does the plan afford an assurance that adequate accommodation will be provided for the number for which the house is licensed?—It can be done by a calculation of the number of rooms.

938. If the number of rooms to be occupied by the person to whom the establishment belongs is not restricted, what limitation is there to the extent to which he may encroach upon the other apartments?—That does not come at all within the control of the Inspectors.

939. What is your opinion?—In my opinion the law is deficient; it does not give authority to fix any obligation preliminary to the giving of the licence. What I wish to convey is, that the law with reference to the proceedings before the giving of the licence is insufficient.

940. Is it competent for the magistrates, in granting a licence, to require that a certain proportion of the apartments should be allocated to the patients?—I should think that is a question of law.

941. Is it practically the case that licences are granted without any conditions being made as to the proportion of the house to be appropriated for the use of the patients?—As I stated before, there were only two asylums that were opened during my time, and I can state the facts as to them, but I do not know what are the facts with reference to the asylums opened before my appointment. This I know, that the magistrates act under the impression that the locality occupied by the family is stated to the magistrates themselves, and known by them. The Clerk of the Peace has one copy of the original building, and of any other subsequent building; and I should say if any alteration is made, a statement of it is sent to him as well as to the Inspector.

942. Am I to understand that when a fresh licence is taken out, the magistrates have nothing before them but the fresh application?—Nothing but that and the report of the Inspectors as to the manner in which the institution has been conducted.

943. Do you know, practically, whether, when a fresh licence is given, the magistrates ask for the plans of the house and of the additions, if any have been made, deposited with the Clerk of the Peace?—The magistrates ask for the reports of the Inspectors, as a ground upon which to decide whether they will give the licence or not.

944. Do you speak from your own knowledge of the proceedings at Quarter Sessions?—I do. As I mentioned, I have been there. Of course I state my conscientious belief of the fact.

945. In making the visitation of the licensed houses, do you consider it your duty to see whether proper accommodation is afforded to the inmates therein detained?—Yes.

946. And to ascertain the number of rooms allocated to the patients?—Yes.

947. And the suitability of these rooms for their accommodation?—Yes; that is part of my duty.

948. If you found a licensed house occupied for the greater part by the family of the licensee, would you consider that a matter to be noted in your observation?—Yes; with one or two exceptions, I can truly and safely say, that the strictest justice is done by the proprietors to the patients, as regards the extent of the accommodation.

949. Do the magistrates at all inquire into the pecuniary circumstances of the person applying for the licence?—No, they do not, which is a great mistake.

950. Would you feel it your duty to make any observation on the fact, if you found that the inmates were limited in the accommodation afforded to them?—Yes; I have constantly spoken to one or two persons. I have said it was a shame for them to go on. They said, "I have so many inmates here who pay nothing, and others who pay very little. Am I to turn them out upon the world?" And when a man comes forward, and says his poverty is the result of non-payment on the part of his patients, am I to deal harshly with him? I have known cases of inmates, whose family did not pay for their maintenance for three years. Some allowance, I think, must be made in such cases. I would, therefore, have a lunatic asylum for inmates whose friends are not able to pay for their maintenance.

951. Is not the object of the 5th and 6th Vic., cap. 123, to provide, as far as possible, for private licensed houses being maintained in a manner suitable for the treatment of lunatics?—Yes; and however much they may condemn some asylums in Ireland, yet, with regard to kindness of manner and benevolence of feeling towards the patients, there is no reason to complain. I never heard of any cruelties being perpetrated; but, at the same time, I must say there is not the same attention paid to the comforts and conveniences of life I should wish to see.

952. Would not the object of this Act be defeated, if the omission on the part of friends to pay for patients was to be allowed as a justification for not maintaining the asylums in a proper condition?—I do not state it as a justification. I merely mentioned the matter to show the difficulty of dealing with those people. You will remember that I am restricting my observations to one or two asylums. I know one asylum that I would get rid of if I could.

953. Do you think that licensed houses are not well adapted for the care of lunatics, whose friends can only afford to pay very small sums for their keep and maintenance?—I do certainly think they are not well adapted.

954. And that they are better adapted for those for whom payments can be made, both to a greater amount and with more regularity?—Certainly.

955. Have any licences been revoked since the passing of the 5th and 6th Vic., cap. 123?—No. I recommended the magistrates on one occasion to grant a licence for six months only, with a view to having an improvement made in the asylum. An improvement was made, and they allowed the licence to go on. I think, generally speaking, and taking into consideration the restricted means of the majority of the proprietors, the private asylums are in a very fair state.

956. On visiting the several private asylums, do you regularly, in the inspecting book, enter the fact of your having visited, together with such observations as may occur to you to make?—I do always what the law directs. I enter three or four visits; but I do not enter all.

957. Do you regularly inspect the patients' book?—I do, regularly.

958. And insert therein such observations as you feel necessary?—Certainly. With regard to the patients who are likely to be cured, I have written to their friends—the fathers, sisters, and brothers of patients—begging of them to remove them from the different asylums, and place them elsewhere, or to take them home and give them a trial.

959. The statutory visits of the Inspectors to licensed houses are made each half year, or twice a year?—Yes; twice a year.

960. When, practically, is that statutory year considered to commence and determine; is it the current year of our Lord?—We compute the year from the taking out of the licence.

961. When are the licences given?—Generally in October. In some places in January. It depends upon the period that a man wishes to take it out. He may apply at any Quarter Sessions.

962. Is a medical journal kept in the private asylums?—Yes; except perhaps in one house, of which I have frequently cause to complain.

963. According to your construction of the Act, does it require that in every licensed house a book called a medical journal is to be kept?—Yes.

964. In the case of a house in which the licensed proprietor is resident, and a medical man, do you conceive it to be his duty to keep that book?—I do. There was a question on that case, and I referred the medical man to the Law Adviser at the Castle. The medical man of the house said he was not bound to keep the book. I said I did not want to interfere with his rights or privileges; but I submitted the case to the Law Adviser, and he was of opinion the books should be kept.

965. Do you think it your duty to inquire how far the patients in these private houses are allowed to attend religious worship?—Yes.

966. Are the arrangements generally satisfactory on that point?—Well, I think they are not so satisfactory as I should wish.

967. Have you found that they refused, in any case, to allow the patients to proceed to a place of public worship, on the ground that the sum paid did not enable them to employ the services of an attendant to accompany them?—No; I do not think that occurred. The principal objection against sending them out is, that they sometimes try to make their escape.

968. Have you paid any special visits under the Act to individual patients?—Yes, I have.

969. Have you reason to believe many patients have been improperly confined in private asylums?—Certainly not. There are those doubtful cases, which are really very painful, where persons, particularly females, of dissipated habits, utter strangers to morality, who become plausible for a few months, get out, and when outside, show that they have not proper respect for their position in life. I have regretted the discharge of such persons.

970. Have you paid any night visits under the thirty-second section of the Act?—No.

971. Have you liberated any persons after investigation, as provided by the Act?—Yes; I let out many of them on trial, some never returned.

972. When you speak of patients having been discharged on trial, do you mean that such persons were to be re-admitted, or were re-admitted without any fresh order, or fresh certificate?—Yes; and I have the authority of the Law Adviser of the Crown for doing it. A case occurred at Dr. Gregory's asylum, of a gentleman who was discharged from it though not recovered. He was re-admitted in three months afterwards. On my visit to the asylum I found him there, and I said, this man is not legally admitted, inasmuch as there are not the legal certificates. The proprietor said, I think I am justified in receiving him. I replied, I think you are not. I referred the case to the Law Adviser, and I had his opinion, that the man, not being discharged as a cured lunatic, he did not consider it necessary that, after the lapse of three months, there should be a fresh certificate.

973. Practically, what is the construction put by the Inspectors upon the law with reference to the power of re-admission of patients, without fresh orders and certificates, who have either been discharged on trial, or who have escaped. Upon what principle do you act in such cases?—I have always endeavoured to make them get new certificates. If a man escapes from an asylum, and is brought back again after an absence of fourteen or sixteen days, I have invariably demanded a second certificate.

974. The notice so forwarded by the proprietors of licensed houses enables you to have nominal statements in your office of the inmates in the asylums?—We have a regular return.

975. The notice which the Act requires to be given to you of the escape, return, or death of insane persons, would enable you, at any time, to ascertain how many still remained in the asylum?—Yes, if they are honestly given.

Compliance with license as to number of inmates.

976. Do you, on each of your inspections, accurately ascertain that the number of inmates, male and female, in the establishment corresponds with the number for which it is licensed?—We ascertain it as accurately as possible. Sometimes there is a concealment. If a man takes out his license for thirty or thirty-four patients, he may have one over, and if the Inspectors ask him to bring out the patients, there may be one or two out walking.

977. But in such a case he must equally have omitted to send the notice of orders and certificates?—No, I have known this to occur: the proprietor of an establishment having a license for thirty-six patients, and having that number when I inspected, wanted to take two more; we, knowing he had room for them, said, you may take them, you notifying to the Clerk of the Peace, and paying the surplus money.

Exemption of non-compliance.

978. Do you mean that an additional number of patients beyond the number for which the house was licensed by the justices, was, in the manner you have stated, sanctioned?—I conceal nothing; I frankly tell you we did it in one or two instances. A proprietor, in the case of a lady, said that she was so bad that she should be taken in.

979. Do you accurately ascertain in each case that the number of inmates corresponds, as regards sex, with the number for which the house was licensed?—Yes, I think so.

980. Would you consider the terms of the license to have been adhered to, if the aggregate number corresponded with that allowed by the license, without there being any distinction as to the number of males and females?—No, I think that would be an infraction, if the number of each sex was not in accordance with the license. The act, however, is not explicit on this point.

Treatment of patients.

981. Do you find, generally, that adequate attendance is provided for the patients in these asylums?—That is a point on which I do not think they come up to my wishes.

982. Speaking generally, do you consider that those private licensed houses are more places of detention for lunatics than places where their curative treatment is attended to?—No, I should say their curative treatment is looked after. I think these houses are very successful in their treatment; I think a very fair number are dismissed cured.

Notices to Inspectors, in case of unlicensed houses.

983. The law provides that, in all cases where insane persons are received into an unlicensed house, you shall receive notice, and that a copy of the order and certificate shall be furnished to you—except in certain cases provided for. Have you reason to believe that regulation is complied with?—I have reason to believe it is not complied with.

984. What has been the average number of notices of this kind that you have received of such cases in each year?—Scarcely any.

985. Do you consider that the law should enable the Inspector to make, say an annual visitation in such cases?—Certainly.

Amendment of the law.

986. Do you consider the provisions of the Act sufficient as regards those cases?—No. 987. In what respects do you consider that the law generally, with regard to private licensed houses, requires amendment?—I think it should be more stringent; that there should be a power given to a central authority, and that that authority should exercise a perfect control over the institution, and that the only appeal should be made to the Lord Chancellor in case a party thinks himself aggrieved as proprietor. At present there is a sort of divided authority indirect and indefinite.

Office staff of Inspectors.

988. You have stated, generally, the duties of Inspectors of Asylums; of what is your office staff in Dublin composed?—We have two clerks.

989. Could you give the Commissioners any return or statement of the amount of business transacted in one year in that department?—Yes, I will furnish such a return to the Commissioners.

THE POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS—HARDWICKE CELLS—LUNATICS IN WORKHOUSES.

Benjamin Burke, Esq., sworn and examined.

990. What situation do you at present hold under the Poor Law Commissioners?—I am Chief Clerk.

991.—You have been for many years an officer in that department?—I have; for the last fourteen years in Ireland.

992. Are you acquainted with an institution existing in Ireland called the House of Industry?—I am.

993. Are you aware of the exact position in which that now stands as regards the Poor Law Commissioners?—It still remains under the control of the Poor Law Commissioners, as vested in them by the 34th section of the Irish Poor Relief Act.

994. The only portion of the Dublin House of Industry which the Commissioners handed over to the Guardians was that, I believe, now occupied as the North Dublin Union Workhouse?—Yes.

995. What is that portion of the House of Industry Hospital occupied by lunatics now called?—The Hardwicke cells.

996. How are the funds provided for the maintenance of this House of Industry Hospital?—By an annual vote of Parliament.

997. Do the Poor Law Commissioners appoint the officers for this institution?—No, the superior officers are appointed by the Irish Government; the inferior officers—nurses, servants, wardmasters, and such like—are appointed by the Governors of the institution.

998. What control, then, do the Poor Law Commissioners exercise over the establishment?—Legally, they have the same control which they have over the workhouses. In any case of dispute or complaint they interfere. Their inquiries into the conduct of officers have been numerous. Regulations have been issued by the Commissioners under the powers given them for the government of the institution.

999. Will you be so kind as to furnish the Commissioners with a copy of these regulations?—Yes, I have them here. [The copy is delivered in].

1000. Do the Poor Law Commissioners exercise the same authority over the Governors of the institution that they exercise over the Boards of Guardians of the Unions?—They have not the same means of enforcing any directions they may give; subject to that qualification they do.

1001. Are the funds voted by Parliament for the maintenance of the House of Industry, placed to the credit of the Poor Law Commissioners and issued by them?—They are.

1002. On whose requisition?—The Governor's.

1003. Does he make requisitions for all the subordinate departments in the House of Industry?—Yes.

1004. Are there any rules or regulations governing the hospital besides those which you have now handed in?—There is a tradition, I believe, but nothing more, of the old rules being in spirit carried out; the rules which existed before the introduction of the Irish Poor Law, when the House of Industry was under the management of the Board of Governors.

1005. Are any of the Poor Law Inspectors in the habit of visiting the institution periodically in the same manner as union workhouses are visited?—Not at any stated periods. There is no periodical inspection, but the institution is looked upon in the office as being as much under the inspection of the Inspector of the district as any workhouse would be; the only difference being, that in the case of the workhouses we require, for various purposes, which we do not require in the case of the House of Industry, a periodical inspection to be made for the sake of the periodical report. Not requiring that report in the case of the House of Industry, we have not required a periodical inspection.

1006. Is it a portion of the duty of the Inspector of the Dublin district to visit at any time in the year the hospital of the House of Industry?—Not at any specified time.

1007. Practically, does any Poor Law Inspector visit that institution except when he is particularly directed to do so?—I cannot call to my mind any instance in which the present Inspector has inspected the institution. He may have done so without my knowledge, but I am not aware of any record in the office of any inspection by the present Inspector.

1008. How long has the present Inspector been in charge of the Dublin district?—Four or five years, or more.

1009. What means have the Poor Law Commissioners of ascertaining the condition of these hospitals and of their inmates?—By direct inquiry, or by sending the Inspector, if any circumstance arises to lead to the belief that there is any thing wrong.

1010. Does the Governor of the House of Industry furnish any periodical reports to the Poor Law Commissioners?—No, except his financial statement.

1011. Have the Poor Law Commissioners issued any rules or given any orders with reference to the classification of patients in the Hardwicke cells?—None.

1012. Have they given any orders with reference to the diet to be given to patients in the institution?—They have had correspondence occasionally with the Governor on the subject, principally arising on suggestions made by the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums.

1013. Are the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums in the habit of making, from time to time, reports on the state of the Hardwicke cells to the Poor Law Commissioners?—They frequently do, when they see any thing to complain of. I have seen such reports, but not often; they only make reports if there is any thing wrong which they think it necessary to bring under the notice of the Commissioners. Those of a more serious nature are submitted to the Commissioners, and not any ordinary trifling complaints.

1014. Has it ever, that you are aware of, been under the consideration of the Poor Law Commissioners to remove the lunatics from the Hardwicke cells to any other place?—Some years ago it was suggested by the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, and some steps were taken with the view of carrying out that suggestion; but the only premises eligible could not be obtained—that was an old artillery barrack; or the expense of making them suitable for the purpose was so great, that the thing was abandoned altogether.

1015. Am I to understand, that no returns are furnished from the House of Industry Hospitals or the Hardwicke cells, as a portion of those hospitals, except the financial statement of the Governors?—That is so.

B. Baskin, Esq.
Control of Commis-

Control over the state of the building.

1016. Do the Poor Law Commissioners exercise any control over the salaries and wages of the officers and servants of the institution?—They have a control over the officers.

1017. Have they the power of fixing the salaries or allowances originally?—No; no change in the existing rate of salaries would be permitted without the sanction of the Commissioners, and they would not, on their own authority, sanction it, but would submit the matter to the Irish Government. Practically, the Government fixed the salaries. I refer the Commissioners for particulars respecting the House of Industry, to the Sixth Annual Report of the Poor Law Commissioners. [Same is delivered in].

1018. Do the Poor Law Commissioners exercise any control over the state of the building, or is that left to be provided for by the Governor of the House of Industry?—They do exercise a very decided control. They have been at issue with the Governor upon points connected with that, and the latter has gone to such a length that they reported him to the Lord Lieutenant.

1019. Upon what did that difference of opinion arise?—It arose upon a question of the supply of water. In the first instance, the Governor reported to the Commissioners that the water was in a very bad state. Mr. Crawford, I believe, inspected, and then the Architect inspected, and certain works were directed to be done, which the Commissioners ordered the Governor to carry out. He, upon that, said the water was improved—said he had not means to carry out the works, and that they were not necessary—and he resisted until a positive direction was given from the Commissioners to carry out the instructions previously conveyed to him; and his conduct was then reported to the Lord Lieutenant in connexion with some other matters.

1020. Suppose that any improvements in the Hardwicke cells were required, would the Commissioners be the parties to undertake them, or would it be left to the Governor to suggest?—If the Governor suggested that any thing was necessary, the Commissioners would inquire. They would send their Architect or Inspector, and would decide themselves upon the necessity for the change.

1021. But would they take the initiative?—They would not; it must be suggested externally. They do receive suggestions independently of the Governor. They always inquire by their Inspector or Architect.

1022. Is any inspection made periodically, by any officer of the Commissioners, with the view of ascertaining the condition of the Hardwicke cells?—No periodical inspection; certainly no periodical inspection is directed.

1023. Has the condition of the building of the Hardwicke cells been brought under the notice of the Commissioners at all?—Not that I am aware; not specifically, certainly.

1024. Are you aware of their having received any reports with regard to the building?—Not with regard to the building.

1025. Have they received reports with reference to the condition of the institution generally?—As to the management, the diet and supplies, they have received many reports from the Inspectors of Asylums, and sometimes from the physician. I am not aware of any as to the state of the building.

1026. If the result of the inspection directed by the Commissioners, on receiving these complaints, should show the necessity for an improvement being made, would they at once direct this improvement to be carried out?—Oh, immediately; I think the instance I have referred to, as to the water, shows that.

1027. I believe the Island-bridge Lunatic Asylum no longer exists?—It is closed.

1028. Can you give the Commissioners any information with reference to the Lifford House of Industry?—I am not aware of its existence.

1029. If, on inquiry, you procure any report on the subject, will you be so good as to furnish it to the Commissioners?—I will.

1030. In the construction of the workhouses in Ireland, is provision made for the lunatic poor who might be received into these institutions?—To a very limited extent indeed.

1031. Are you aware whether any particular classes of lunatics were intended to be provided for?—My impression is that all lunatics were to be excluded unless they were completely harmless. We did not contemplate receiving any but idiotic cases—persons of that class.

1032. Have any particular orders been issued by the Commissioners with reference to the treatment of the lunatic poor who might be in the workhouses?—Certainly not; no special orders for that class. The medical officer has a general power to adopt such measures as might be necessary for the sick and lunatic. That is the extent of the regulations the Commissioners have made on the subject.

1033. Have the Commissioners ever received applications, or has it ever been suggested to them, that certain imbecile lunatics in asylums might, with advantage, be transferred to the workhouses?—I am not prepared to say they have; I am not aware of any. I think I must have known of them if there had been any such suggestions.

1034. If, on inquiry, you find that the subject has been under the consideration of the Commissioners, and that any orders have been made with reference thereto, perhaps you will be so good as to furnish them?—Yes.

1036. Is there any provision of the law enabling the maintenance of the paupers in the lunatic asylums to be provided for out of the rates?—None.

1037. Have the Commissioners at any time issued any certificates or given any directions with reference to the transfer of paupers from workhouses to lunatic asylums?—No.

Transfer of lunatics to Asylums.

1038. Is it the duty of any of the officers of the unions to make applications for the admission of pauper lunatics into the district asylums?—It will only become the duty of the master or other officer if there is reason to suppose a pauper will become dangerous, not otherwise.

1039. Are there no instructions given to the officers of workhouses, or the officers of the unions, to make application for the admission of pauper lunatics, who may not be dangerous, to district asylums?—No.

1040. Is it the duty of the Relieving Officers or Guardians of the poor to take any measures for the admission of lunatics to the asylums out of the poorhouses?—It forms no part of the officers' duty.

1041. Do the Poor Law Inspectors report particularly upon the number of lunatics in the workhouses, or their condition?—We get a statement of their numbers, but none as to their condition, unless in extreme cases there might be some observations upon their condition; but not otherwise.

1042. Does the law admit of lunatics discharged from district asylums being transferred, by the asylum authorities, direct to the workhouse?—Any pauper, whether lunatic or not, is admissible to the workhouses, otherwise there is no power.

1043. Under what circumstances can a lunatic pauper receive out-door relief?—I think the case would come under the first section of the Irish Poor Relief Extension Act, which allows out-door relief to be given by the Guardians to certain classes not able to provide for their own living. It is a point of construction. A lunatic could not be held to be able-bodied, and able to obtain his own living.

1044. The lunatic poor are, therefore, in no other position, as regards the reception of out-door relief, than the destitute poor?—Certainly not.

1045. They might, in fact, receive out-door relief as being considered permanently disabled from labour by reason of mental defect?—Yes.

1046. Is there any limitation as to the extent to which this relief may be afforded, having regard to the means of the recipient?—No legally defined limitation to the amount of relief. Those eligible are the destitute poor, unable to maintain themselves.

1047. Would not the limitation in the same Act, that such relief is not to be given to persons occupying more than a quarter of an acre apply to pauper lunatics?—I think so. Undoubtedly the words are considered expressly to prohibit relief to any person holding a quarter of an acre of land.

1048. Are you enabled to state to what extent relief is now given under the first section? Scarcely any at all out of the workhouses; there may be a little, but it is so insignificant that it is not worth mentioning.

1049. And the proportion of that insignificant number who are lunatics may be extremely small?—Oh, very small. I do not know that there are any.

1050. Have the medical officers of the dispensary districts or unions any power or duty whatever in reference to insane poor not in workhouses, but who are wandering about?—I think not.

1051. Supposing a destitute idiot to be wandering about a district, would it be the duty of the relieving officer to provide any relief for that idiot or lunatic?—As a destitute person, it would. If he heard of a case of destitution in his district, it would be his duty to take steps for the relief of that person.

1052. Would the Board of Guardians ultimately decide whether that patient should receive out-door or in-door relief?—They would, the next Board day.

1053. What is the number of unions in Ireland at present?—One hundred and sixty-three.

1054. Is that a correct measure of the number of workhouses?—There may be a few auxiliary workhouses still remaining, but very few.

1056. Have the circumstances of the country so altered since the additional number of workhouses were provided, as to render it questionable whether so many are necessary?—It is questioned by many on the ground of the alteration in the circumstances of the country. It is not admitted, I believe, by the Commissioners to be a sound view of the case, that the smallness of the number in the workhouses renders it advisable to reduce the number of workhouses.

1057. I believe, in many cases, buildings which are not now occupied were erected, at considerable expense, in addition to the workhouses, by the Guardians?—They were erected at a great deal of expense.

1058. Have the Poor Law Commissioners the means of furnishing an approximate statement of the number of insane in the workhouses at this moment?—We could not give you any thing to be relied upon without a circular being sent to the unions. A few days would do that.

HOUSE OF INDUSTRY—THE HARDWICKE CELLS.

House of Industry, Hardwicke Cells.
H. H. Stewart, Esq.,
M.D., F.R.C.S.E.

Henry Hatchiana Stewart, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.E., sworn and examined.

1059. I believe you hold the office of Governor of the House of Industry?—I do.

1060. How long have you held that appointment?—Since March, 1847.

1061. By whom were you appointed?—The Earl of Beauchamp.

1062. Are the Hardwicke cells for the reception of lunatics a portion of the House of Industry, which is under your charge?—They are.

1063. What is your authority over the Hardwicke cells?—I think the same authority that I have as Governor over the officers, with a discretionary power—the same as my predecessor.

1064. Did your appointment particularly specify your duties?—No.

1065. Is there any enumeration of your duties in the rules or regulations of the establishment?—There is such in the Poor Law Report of 1840. In that report Mr. Hall, I think, referred to the House of Industry, and enumerated the duties of the Governor.

1066. Are there any general rules or regulations published?—No. I beg to remark that after I got my appointment, I was directed by the Poor Law Commissioners to apply for instructions for the fulfilment of my duties to Mr. Phelan, whom I succeeded.

1067. Are there any specific rules and regulations for the government of the Hardwicke cells?—No.

1068. By whom are the officers of the Hardwicke cells appointed?—The physician is appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, and the superintendent and matron by the Governor.

1069. By whom are the subordinate officers appointed?—By the Governor.

1070. Do you exercise complete control over that portion of the House of Industry, as part of the institution?—I do.

1071. By whom is the dietary of the establishment fixed?—It was fixed by the former Governor; I made no change in the dietary that I found in existence, when I entered on office.

1072. Can you furnish a copy of the dietary so fixed?—I can; there are two dietaries, an ordinary dietary and a medical dietary. The medical dietary is under the control of the medical officer. I hand in a copy of the ordinary dietary and of the medical dietary, and the formulary for making soup. [Some are delivered in].

1073. In the paper which you have furnished, there is a statement of the ordinary dietary and of the extra dietaries of meat, rice, and milk; I understand the latter dietaries are only given to patients on the order of the medical attendant?—Yes.

1074. Are these dietaries subject to change by his directions?—They are.

1075. What local superintendence is exercised over the Hardwicke cells?—There is a superintendent and a matron under my directions, and I understand under the visitation of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums; but they are immediately under my control.

1076. Are the superintendent and matron responsible for these dietaries, when they are ordered to be given to the inmates?—They are.

1077. Do you, yourself, visit the Hardwicke cells frequently, and how often?—I occasionally visit them, if I hear of any thing out of the ordinary course. I go in to visit now and again.

1078. Do you visit the institution once a day?—I do not.

1079. Do you visit it once a week?—I do not.

1080. Do you visit it once a month?—I really cannot say; I do not think, lately, I have visited once a month.

1081. How far distant is it from your residence?—Oh, a very short way. The buildings are on the premises of the House of Industry. I spend the whole day, from eleven to four o'clock, in the place.

1082. Do you visit them once in the quarter?—I am sure I do. I may go in every day for four or five days in succession, and then two months or six weeks may elapse before I go in again.

1083. Are any daily statements laid before you of the condition of that institution or of the inmates?—There is a Daily Report Book laid before me.

1084. Be so good as to enumerate the books which are kept in reference to the Hardwicke cells?—There is a Morning Statement Book, the Superintendent's Communication Book, the Matron's Communication Book, the Inspectors' Report Book, the Report Book of Deaths, the Dietary Book, the Medical Diet Book, and the Prescription Book. [Some are produced.]

1085. Does the Morning Statement Book contain any thing more than numerical statements of the numbers of inmates in the establishment, distinguishing servants from patients, and males from females?—No.

1086. Is any statement in writing laid before you, either daily, or weekly, or oftener, of the condition of the inmates of the institution?—No.

1087. The Superintendent's Communication Book seems to contain chiefly the lists of recommendations with regard to diet and requisitions for the articles required for use in the institution?—Yes? My attention is drawn to any matter that is necessary for me to know by that Communication Book.

1088. The last entry in that book appears to be dated 13th February, 1856; and I observe that it contains a recommendation, that certain patients should get stirabout instead of bread, without any reason being assigned for that recommendation?—The men asked for it; they preferred getting stirabout.

1089. Do you receive any daily statement from the matron as to the condition of the institution or the inmates?—No; unless there is any thing wrong. I have no ordinary statement.

1090. Does the Report Book of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums contain any entry of Inspector's visits?—No.

1091. Is it kept at the Hardwicke cells, or at your residence?—It is kept at the Hardwicke cells.

1092. The last official visit recorded by the Inspectors, is the visit of Dr. White, on the 20th October, 1856. The previous entry bears date February 14th, 1859. How often, within these four years, did you know the Inspectors to have visited the institution?—I cannot tell. I sometimes heard from the superintendent, they had called in to inquire how matters were going on.

1093. I observe that the last minute or entry by Dr. White, to which I have referred, dated 20th October, 1856, details a case of ill-treatment of a lunatic patient, named Thomas Byrne, while employed in the garden of the House of Industry; when did you become acquainted with that case?—On Saturday week; that was the day on which the occurrence took place.

Mistreatment of a lunatic patient.

1094. Was it represented to you by any officer of the institution?—No.

1095. How did it first come to your knowledge?—I met the man when I was leaving the hospital; he came up to speak to me, and I discovered his face was black, and I inquired how it happened. He is a very incoherent man, but I found out from him that it was done by John Kisby, a pupil in the hospital, and son to the resident apothecary.

1096. What steps did you take in consequence of that statement?—I went to the resident apothecary, and saw that young man, John Kisby, and I asked him if he blackened Byrne's face, and he said he did it with caustic. I asked him why he did it, and he said it was a practical joke, and that he regretted having done it. He confessed that he did it with a solution of lunar caustic. This was late on Saturday. I told him he had committed a very serious offence, and that I would inquire into it on Monday. On Monday I heard that the face of Byrne was very much swollen and blistered in consequence of some subsequent application by Kisby. He applied caustic potash. He wrote a letter to me afterwards, and said the reason he applied the caustic potash was, that he heard it would remove the dark colour from the face, and that he thought it a mild application. There is an application of potash which is mild, but he used caustic potash, instead of the mild application. I proceeded to my office, and had an order written at once. It was an ambiguous order; it implied expulsion, but it was intended only for suspension, for that which he had committed.

1097. Will you furnish a copy of that order?—I will.

1098. Was Byrne within the Hardwicke cells at the time that either of these applications were used upon his face?—At the time of the first application he was in the garden. He was out of the Hardwicke cells at the time of both applications.

1099. What steps did you take with reference to the man who had been so treated?—I sent the physician, Dr. McDowell, in to see him on Monday.

1100. Is Dr. McDowell the physician attending the Hardwicke cells?—He is.

1101. Is he solely charged with the care of the Hardwicke cells?—He is.

1102. Did you report the whole of that transaction to the Poor Law Commissioners?—I did. Reported so.

1103. Did you make any report of the case to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums?—No. On Monday morning I met Dr. Waite, after I had given directions for the suspension of the young man, and he told me he was coming to inquire into the transaction. I wrote to Dr. White, that I had reported the matter to the Poor Law Commissioners.

1104. Do you feel it your duty to report all occurrences of irregularity that may arise, to the Poor Law Commissioners?—If they are of sufficient consequence, but not ordinary occurrences.

1105. Have any steps been taken with regard to this matter by them?—They sent their Inspector, Mr. Crawford, to make an inquiry into it. He examined the father of the young man the day before yesterday.

1106. Is the young man still attending as a pupil at this hospital?—He is under suspension.

1107. Does Dr. McDowell, the Medical Officer of the Hardwicke cells, make any reports in relation to the general health of the inmates of the cells, or otherwise, in relation to their condition?—No.

1108. Are there any rules or regulations prescribing periodical visits on the part of the medical officer?—No. I have a letter here that will bear upon the point; I will hand it in. [Some is delivered in]. Medical attendance.

1109. The document to which you refer appears to have been signed by Dr. Pacha, when Governor, and is dated 6th January, 1847?—Yes.

1110. I observe in that order reference is made to the visiting hour of the physician—does that refer to the hour of his daily visits to the institution, or to that particular branch of the institution, the Hardwicke cells?—I presume to his daily visits to the hospitals. He does visit the institution daily, and word is sent to him to go to the cells if there is any case requiring his attendance.

1111. Dr. Pacha's order was directed to a particular matter—namely, that in any urgent case the doctor should be sent for?—Yes, so as not to leave it to the clinical clerk; there is one resident.

1112. Am I to understand that there is really no order requiring the daily attendance of the medical officer of the Hardwicke cells?—No.

1113. What is the practice with regard to the visits of the medical attendant?—Either the matron or superintendent leaves word with the porter at the gate that the doctor is required to go in to see a patient.

1114. Are the Commissioners to understand that unless the superintendent or the matron considers a case to be one that requires the attendance of the physician, he, practically, does not attend the cells?—That is the case.

1115. Is it left, therefore, to their judgment to determine whether the cases of these lunatic patients require medical attendance or not?—It is.

1116. I believe they are both non-professional?—They are.

1117. Has Dr. McDowell a resident pupil in the establishment?—There are two resident pupils to four physicians.

1118. Is there any resident pupil in the habit of attending daily the Hardwicke cells?—No.

1119. Is there a resident pupil in the habit of attending these cells at frequent intervals?—No, not unless he is called for in the absence of the physician.

1120. Then the attendance of the resident pupil or physician is dependent upon the superintendent or matron's opinion as to the necessity for such?—It is.

1121. Do you require any reports to be made to you by the superintendent or matron of the Hardwicke cells as to the occasions upon which restraint is used?—I do.

1122. In what book may these reports be contained?—I am not aware of any book. Whenever a report was made to me that a patient required restraint, I was in the habit of going down to see him. Neither the superintendent nor matron have any power to put any patient under restraint without reporting it to me.

1123. Are your visits so frequent as to enable you, yourself, to judge whether restraint may not for a considerable time be used with regard to patients?—My visits are sufficiently frequent to judge of that. There is little restraint required, for the patients are quite harmless.

1124. Do you ever visit the institution at night?—I have not latterly. I have done so early in the morning.

1125. Did any special circumstances come to your knowledge that rendered such a visit necessary?—No, but I visited both the hospital and Hardwicke cells at hours at which the officers did not expect me.

Religious provision.

1126. What religious provision is made for the inmates of these cells?—There is a Protestant chaplain and a Roman Catholic chaplain attached to the institution generally.

1127. Are the inmates of the Hardwicke cells, or such of them as may be fit to attend, allowed to go to religious worship every Sunday?—Yes; a priest goes there, and the Protestant chaplain has worship in another room, for all such patients as are able to go.

Cleanliness.

1128. Is the superintendent charged with the arrangements for maintaining the establishment in proper order as regards cleanliness?—He is. Both the superintendent and the matron have a Requisition Book, and every thing they require they write it down in that book and send it up to me, and I refer it to the steward.

Medical Diet Book; suitability of building.

1129. By whom is the Medical Diet Book kept?—By the superintendent.

1130. Does the medical attendant sign the Medical Diet Book?—It is not signed by him. He gives authority to the superintendent to have so many patients on medical diet.

1131. I observe that the Medical Diet Book was signed by Dr. McDowell, the medical attendant, up to the 22nd of February, 1851; why has he not continued to affix his name to these orders for medical diet?—He omitted it, and the omission continued; but he gave authority to the superintendent, and by his authority these signatures were put in the book.

1132. Is there any written document to show that authority?—No.

1133. Do you consider the building of the Hardwicke cells suitable for the accommodation of lunatics?—No; I always thought it was not a suitable building. I always understood that the continuance of the inmates there was but temporary.

1134. Would you feel it your duty to report to the Poor Law Commissioners, or any other authority, any defects which existed in the building which you thought ought to be remedied?—No.

1135. You have not practically, therefore, made any such reports?—I have not.

1136. What is your opinion as to the present arrangement of the building, even considering its temporary?—I think it very defective.

Washing arrangements; privies, &amp;c.

1137. Are the arrangements, as regards the washing of patients in the several yards, such as you consider proper?—I think they are kept very clean. The arrangements that I found when I entered office I have continued, and I did not see that I could improve them.

1138. Have you visited the yards of that institution recently?—I have.

1139. Are you satisfied with the condition of the privies and other buildings in these grounds?—I had not visited it for some days before the Commissioners came. The morning after the Commissioners visited I went up, and I was satisfied with their condition.

1140. With reference to the medical diet, by whose authority are the allowances of wine and porter, which are directed to be given to patients, discontinued if they should appear unnecessary?—They are allowed by the authority of the physician, and are continued until he strikes them off.

1141. Is it by a verbal communication to the superintendent the disallowance is made known?—Yes, I should think so.

1142. Can you state, of your own knowledge, whether this Medical Diet Book is ever submitted to the medical attendant?—I cannot. I assume that it is, and that it is by his direction the superintendent enters down the extras.

1143. Before signing that book, and allowing the various extras, do you invariably inquire whether the medical attendant has ordered them?—Yes.

1144. Have you been invariably informed that he has?—Yes.

1145. Are you aware of the practice that prevails of the washing of the male patients in the yard at all seasons?—Yes, I know they wash in the hall; they are allowed a quantity of soap.

1146. Are you aware that they are washed at a trough in the yard at all seasons?—I am.

1147. Do you consider that a suitable arrangement?—No. I understood it was only in fine weather that they did so, and that in severe weather they washed in the hall. If the weather was fine I think it would answer.

1148. Can you furnish a statement of the salaries, wages, and allowances, paid to the officers of the Hardwicke cells?—I can.

1149. By whom are those salaries or allowances fixed or allowed?—They were not fixed nor allowed by me. The same allowances that I found had been given, I give.

1150. Do you know with whom the authority rests to alter or fix them?—I do not. I should think it is with the Governor of the House of Industry, having the authority of the Poor Law Commissioners.

1151. With whom does the authority rest to dismiss the officers or servants?—The authority rests with the Lord Lieutenant to dismiss the officers appointed by him, and with me to dismiss the servants whom I appoint.

1152. Do you make any reports from time to time to the Poor Law Commissioners, or any other authority, as to the state of the institution?—I make an annual report to the Poor Law Commissioners: I furnish a general statement of the condition of the hospital.

1153. Does that statement contain a report upon the institution, or is it merely a financial statement?—It is a financial statement and general report.

1154. Beyond that general report and financial statement, are you in the habit of making any periodical communication to the Poor Law Commissioners?—No.

1155. Or to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, with regard to the Hardwicke cells?—No, unless something unusual occurs, like the case of Byrne, the other day.

1156. Does the report which you annually make to the Poor Law Commissioners enter into the sanitary condition of the inmates, or their treatment, or the state of the building?—No.

1157. Will you furnish the Commissioners with a copy of the last Annual Report made to the Poor Law Commissioners?—I will.

Benjamin George McDowell, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

1158. I believe you are one of the physicians to the House of Industry establishment?—Yes.

1159. Are you in particular charge of the Hardwicke cells?—I am.

1160. Is that by any special appointment, or under any particular arrangement?—I think it is by a private arrangement among the physicians.

1161. How long have you been so occupied?—I think since 1847. I was a year before in charge of the Island-bridge Lunatic Asylum.

1162. Are there any special rules specifying your duties in connexion with the Hardwicke cells?—I never saw any printed or written rules on the subject.

1163. Did you receive any instructions on your appointment from any person as to the duties you were to perform with reference to the Hardwicke cells?—I do not recollect any. Dr. Litton had been in charge previously. Notices of any patients that were ill were left for me, and I used to go down to see them.

1164. What attendance do you practically give in the Hardwicke cells?—My attendance is exactly as I am sent for by the servants.

1165. You do not consider it your duty to visit the institution without receiving such special notices?—No; I merely understood that I was to take charge of the sick amongst the inmates.

1166. When making visits in consequence of the notice thus given you, is your visit confined merely to the patient with respect to whom you receive the notice, or do you visit generally the whole of the institution, and all the inmates?—If there had been any inmates sick previously I would make it a rule to see them at the time.

1167. The duty which you perform at the Hardwicke cells being practically one merely of medical visitation of any person who may be found to be sick, have you in such a way made yourself acquainted with the condition of the other inmates who may not have been reported to require medical attendance?—Not specially.

1168. Have you a resident pupil?—Yes.

1169. Does he visit the Hardwicke cells by your directions?—He does; and occasionally on any emergency, when I am not there, he is allowed to attend on any medical summons.

1170. Is his attendance similar to that which you have already described—namely, a medical visitation when he receives notice of a particular case, or does he visit the institution generally?—It is merely on summons to a particular patient.

1171. The medical diet of the inmates, as prescribed in the Medical Diet Book, should, I presume, be made according to your directions?—Yes, in the case of the sick.

1172. Were you in the habit of signing the Medical Diet Book?—Yes, I was for some time.

- Durston. 1173. Have you discontinued to do so?—Yes, for some years.
- House of Industry, Hardwicke Cells. 1174. Do you practically know the contents of that book now?—No, I do not; I have not seen it for a long time.
- Benjamin George McDowell, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.E. 1175. Then, in point of fact, the entries in the Medical Diet Book form a prescription of diet of which you, as medical attendant of the institution, know nothing?—I do not know that there is such a book now, and if there is, I do not know its contents. I have ordered particular diet in particular cases.
- Reason for not signing. 1176. Have you any objection to state what has caused the departure from the practice which prevailed when you first attended the institution, of signing the book?—I have no objection to do so. I conceive that there was an injudicious interference on the part of the Governor of the House of Industry in the dietary. On one occasion or more he disallowed some of the dietary I ordered; I then told him I considered it an interference on his part with the medical department, and I said I would not again sign the Medical Dietary Book.
1177. Are we to understand that the Governor of the House of Industry disallowed diet which you had officially prescribed for certain patients under treatment in the Hardwicke cells?—Certainly.
- Prescription Book used instead. 1178. Is that the present Governor?—Yes, the present Governor.
1179. In what way do you now record, officially, the diet which you consider should be given to patients in the Hardwicke cells?—Since that occurrence I have ordered it in the Prescription Book, as a portion of the medical treatment. There is a Prescription Book for medicines; in that I order the diet, wine, or porter, for each case.
- For whom such diet ordered. 1180. Then, in point of fact, that which you previously entered in the Medical Diet Book you put down in the Prescription Book, although not a prescription of medicine?—Yes; my recollection of the matter is, that the entire dietary of the institution was put in a book, and that this came under supervision once a week or a fortnight, or at some stated period, by the medical officer; and on the occurrence of the interference I speak of I discontinued that.
1181. In point of fact, considering that your visits are merely paid to cases of which you receive notice, did the Medical Diet Book at any time, or does the Prescription Book, so far as regards the dietary, fix the diet of any patients except those who required medical attendance?—No.
1182. Then, if patients in the establishment were not considered by the superintendent or matron to require the attendance of the medical officer, although they might require more nourishing diet than they were receiving, you would have no opportunity, according to the practice that exists, of prescribing for them?—I could have no opportunity of doing so, unless the case was brought under my particular notice. It was the habit of the matron or of the superintendent to say that a person looked ill, and I have seen the person, and ordered, if necessary, nourishing diet.
- Intervals of visits. 1183. How long an interval has elapsed between your visits to the Hardwicke cells?—A week or ten days might elapse.
1184. Having prescribed for a patient, do you renew your visits to that same patient without receiving a further notice?—Yes, unless it is something very trivial, such as a fall or a scratch.
- Continuance of medical diet. 1185. Having ordered medical diet for a patient, although the patient's cure might be considered complete, do you attend on future occasions to see whether the medical diet is still required?—No, I do not.
1186. Is the general diet book regularly submitted to you?—No.
1187. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether the medical diet which you may have ordered—wine or porter, or other articles—is practically continued, in consequence of your order, indefinitely, until you give an order to the contrary?—There is very often a transfer of it. A good deal is left to the discretion of the superintendent or the matron. They will say such a person is better, or such person is weakly, and the extra allowance is transferred to the latter; for an average number is kept on medical diet.
1188. Does the transfer of extra or medical diet from one patient to another, in the case you have referred to, take place upon communication with you?—Yes; it never occurs without the knowledge of the medical officer.
- Want of security for administration. 1189. Do you think there is sufficient security in the institution for such increased diet, or such additions to diet, as wine and porter, being really given to the patients for whom the extra diet is ordered?—I do not think there is.
1190. Have you any reason to believe, from your experience attending those cases, that the more nourishing diet you have ordered has not been practically given to the patients?—I have no reason; I have no knowledge of such a thing.
- Numbers now on such diet. 1191. Are you aware at this moment how many patients in the Hardwicke cells are on extra diet?—I was just going to state that, for the last five or six months, the system is totally different from what it was before. There has been a change of patients and a transfer of them has taken place from Island-bridge; and a very large number who were ordered extras at Island-bridge have remained on it; at least I do not know that any change has been made.
1192. Do the books of the establishment which you inspect upon these occasional visits enable you to form an opinion as to the number of persons who, by your directions or otherwise, receive increased medical diet?—They do not; they are entered merely in succession; there is no tabular arrangement.
1193. The Medical Diet Book to which I first referred, did it not admit of such a conclusion being arrived at?—Yes; it stated the number of persons at the bottom of the column, and the allowance of wine and other things.

1194. Is it a fact that scurvy was prevalent in this institution in March, 1850?—It was.
 1195. Had you, previous to that time, ceased to sign and inspect the Medical Diet Book?—I cannot recollect.

1196. I believe you complained on that occasion of the vegetables that were supplied for the use of the inmates?—I did.

1197. Did you desire a supply of fresh vegetables, such as celery or turnips, might be sent in?—Yes.

1198. It appears from the book, that in consequence of that, a small quantity of Jerusalem artichokes were directed to be sent—do you consider that was a sufficient compliance with your requisition?—It was not.

1199. I believe you subsequently stated that the cases of scurvy in the female ward required to be placed under suitable vegetable diet?—I now recollect that I was obliged to make several complaints at the time about it.

1200. Has scurvy prevailed in the institution at any time to any extent?—It remained for a good while after that, but not to the same extent.

1201. Do you consider that it was merely occasioned by the want of proper vegetable diet, or from other causes?—I think other causes assisted, as for instance, defective ventilation of the place.

1202. Beyond there not being a sufficient vegetable diet, were facilities afforded in other respects to you for the treatment of those cases?—Yes; I think there was no difficulty in getting the proper medicines.

1203. Did you communicate to the Poor Law Commissioners, or any other authority, the conduct of the Governor, in making a disallowance of the dietary, to which you refer?—I did not.

1204. Did you make any communication to the Governor of the institution as to the impropriety of the course he pursued?—I am almost certain I did.

1205. What is your opinion as to the fitness of the cells in which the Hardwicke lunatics are confined, for their reception?—I think it is a very unfit building for the purpose. There are some parts of it better than others—the boarded portion for instance. There are other parts of it with tile floors, wholly unfit for the reception of those persons.

1206. Are you aware of the arrangements made for the daily care of the patients, the washing in the morning, and so forth?—No.

1207. Would you consider it proper treatment for lunatics, that they should be washed at all seasons in the year at a trough in the yard of the institution?—I would not. There might be no objection to it in summer.

1208. I believe the internal arrangements of the institution do not admit of a supply of warm water being always available for the patients?—They do not. There is no provision in case a patient is taken ill at night—there is nobody to look after him.

1209. Are any cases removed for medical treatment to the adjoining Whitworth or Richmond hospitals?—Yes; I often had some chronic cases removed; persons who would die in the cells. I have known some who died in the cells opening into the yard.

1210. It has been stated to us, that an inmate of the Hardwicke cells has been recently ill-treated by a person in the institution?—I saw the man.

1211. How soon after it occurred did you see the case?—I was sent for the following morning. It occurred, I believe, in the afternoon of one particular day, and I saw him early next morning.

1212. In what state did you find him?—The face was very severely lacerated and swollen. The man was suffering some pain. I saw him again two or three days afterwards, and the face very quickly got well. I believe there was more harm done by the attempts to remove the mark, than by the actual application of the caustic. The boy blackened the man's face, and then thought to remove the colouring.

EAGLE HOUSE PRIVATE ASYLUM, FINGERS.

Joseph Timothy Duff, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

1213. You are the proprietor of Eagle House, Fingers?—I am.

1214. Is that house licensed under the 5th and 6th Vict., cap. 123?—It is.

1215. Will you produce the licence?—Yes; here it is. (Same is produced.)

1216. For how many patients is that licence?—Twenty-eight for this year—ten males, and eighteen females.

1217. What number of inmates have you at present in your house?—There are at present eight males, and sixteen females; one was sent away yesterday, cured—a boy.

1218. Did you, when applying for that licence, produce before the Clerk of the Peace the plan of the building?—I did not on this occasion; I did, when I was establishing the house.

1219. Is that plan hung up in the house?—It is.

1220. Is it a correct plan of your present building?—Not exactly.

1221. Have you ever served any notice upon the Clerk of the Peace of any addition you may have made?—I did on one occasion, but not on this. I have masons and carpenters this day engaged in making a water-closet and more windows to the present house, in accordance with what I thought was the wish of the Commissioners, who visited the house a few days ago.

1222. What are the maximum and minimum sums received for patients in your establishment?—For males, from £100 down to £25 per annum; and for females, from £80 to £28 per annum.

DEBATE.

Esq. House of Commons
Asylum, Dublin.
J. T. Duffy, Esq., M. P.
 Reception of a patient without
 documents.

1225. Have you the proper orders and certificates required for the detention of these patients?—I always have. There is an exception. On one occasion there was a patient sent to me, whom I considered a half pauper. The patient was the brother of two respectable persons, both professional men. He is an idiot, and had been placed in the Richmond Institution, from whence he was sent to me, without giving me the slightest notice, by the Inspector of Lunatic Asylums, and thrown upon my establishment for the paltry sum of £25 a-year. I thought he would be left only a few days or a month with me, until there would be more accommodation in the Brunswick-street Asylum, the want of which, it seems, was the reason he was sent to me suddenly, without a certificate. I applied to the proper parties for the certificates, and neither of the brothers sent them to me. I then went to the office of the Inspectors at the Castle, and told the circumstance to Dr. White and Dr. Nugent—that I had applied for and had been refused the certificates. I sent a document stating the circumstance, and it is at the Castle, in the office of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums. There was a physician sent from Mullingar, and he told me in the office that he himself could answer for it that I would get the certificates in the case; but at the same time he observed there was no great necessity for it, as the man was an idiot; and the matter rested there. I went this day, before I came to you, to the office of Lunatic Asylums, and the clerk told me he would keep the manuscript which I had left until the Inspector would come. Mr. Wrigley, the Governor of the Richmond Asylum, brought the patient to me.

1224. How long has the patient to whom you refer been an inmate of your house?—I should suppose about six months, or something more.

1225. Have you received payment for that patient, according to the rate you have stated?—I received the payment, such as it is, £2 5s. a quarter.

1226. Was that payment arranged upon communication with the friends of the lunatic?—It was, I believe, but I am not certain.

1227. What was your reason for applying to the Inspectors for the ordinary certificate, instead of applying to the persons who brought the lunatic to your establishment?—For this reason, that they would naturally demand from me the certificates, which I was unprepared to give, because the man's friends did not furnish them to me; and I had not an opportunity of seeing the friends, who live distant from this.

1228. Are you not aware the law requires you should not receive a patient without such an order and certificate?—Perfectly aware.

Reasons for receiving this patient.

1229. How came you, therefore, to receive the patient without them?—He was sent to me, with the particular request of the Inspector himself to receive him.

1230. Which Inspector?—Dr. White particularly requested me to receive him for a time, and from that time to this he has been with me. He had been under the care of Mr. Wrigley.

1231. Am I to understand that he was brought to your establishment by the manager of a public asylum in Ireland, to have him received, with a request to that effect from the Inspector of Lunatic Asylums in Ireland, without the order or certificate required by law?—He was; but then the Inspector expected from me that I would write to the brothers, and I did write to them, and instead of sending the certificates, they sent a physician to certify; and that physician, as I mentioned to you, came to the Inspectors' office where I applied. I begged of him to forward the certificates to me, and he did not do so. If he has forwarded them to the office of the Inspectors, I have not seen them.

1232. Have you, since the admission of that patient to your house, received a communication from the brothers, authorizing you to detain him?—So far as I have stated; but they did not communicate with me, only by mentioning the certificates would be sent.

1233. Did they communicate that to you directly?—Yes.

1234. Did any medical gentleman, not being one of the Inspectors of Asylums, come to your house, since the reception of that patient, and medically inspect his condition?—Not that I can remember; if any one did, it must have been in my absence.

1235. Did the Governor of the Richmond Asylum, when bringing this patient to your house for reception, bring you any written statement from the Inspector of Asylums, requesting you to detain the patient?—No; he mentioned that Dr. White would be glad I would keep him a while. He did not state the reason why. I heard, afterwards, it was because they were full at the Richmond.

1236. How soon after the reception of the patient did you receive directly, either verbally or in writing, any communication in reference to the detention of the patient?—I cannot remember that.

1237. Did you receive verbally, or in writing, from Dr. White, at any time, a communication requesting you to detain the patient?—Not to detain, but to keep or receive him.

1238. Was it verbally, or in writing?—I cannot say; but I called upon him at the office, complaining that the certificates were not received; and he did his utmost, by getting the physician to promise to give the certificates.

1239. Had this patient been an inmate of the Richmond Asylum, or did he come there as an applicant?—He had been living in it for a considerable time, and sent to me, as I understand, because they were full. The name of the patient is —.

1240. What books do you keep in your institution?—I keep three books.

1241. What are those?—I keep a Patients' Book, I keep the Inspectors' Minute Book, and a Registry of Patients, filled up according as they come and according as they go. [The books are produced.]

1242. In the registry of entrances I find, as to —, that in the column, the heading of which requires a statement of the authority by which he was sent in, you have entered,

"Sent by his brothers?"—Yes, by his brothers. We must always mention the party who sent him.

1243. According to your previous statement, he was not sent by his brothers?—It is supposed it must be by the brother—the nearest relative. He has two brothers, and they expressed a wish that he should be sent. That is what I heard. I had no communication at all with them, nor have I seen either of them since.

1244. Did the Governor of the Richmond Asylum tell you it was by the authority of the brothers he brought — to your house?—No, he did not; but at the same time he told me who they were, and that it would gratify them to have the man received.

1245. In the column of medical certificates, after the name of — I find this entry, "Transferred from Brunswick-street Asylum by the Inspector." Is that an entry of a medical certificate?—Mr. Wrigley told me the Inspector wished it. That is not exactly a medical certificate.

1246. I have before me the Patients' Book, required by the Act to be kept—are all the entries in this book made by yourself, or do the Inspectors ever make entries in it?—They never do. That is my own book; but they make reports in another book, which you will see.

1247. Among the books produced, I do not observe the Medical Journal, according to the form in Schedule G to the Act?—I do not keep the book set forth in Schedule G.

1248. Do you ever keep a book according to the form of that in Schedule G?—No; I did not know it was required.

1249. Is the Patients' Book submitted to the Inspector on the occasion of his visits?—It is there for him to see, and he has seen and examined it.

1250. Has he made any entry of its having been produced?—Not that I am aware.

1251. Have the Inspectors ever called upon you to keep such a book as I have mentioned?—They might have called upon me, but I do not remember.

1252. Do the Inspectors, on the occasion of each visit, make any entry of their visits in the Inspectors' Book?—Not of every visit. Sometimes, for instance, they come on special visits, to see a certain patient; but when they come to make a regular visit they enter it. Once or twice they have given a special report as to certain ladies or gentlemen in the house.

1253. Do the Inspectors regularly examine the Admission and Discharge Book, according to Schedule C?—Sometimes they do.

1254. Do they make any entries in the Patients' Book?—At times they do.

1255. Do they make any entry of its production on the occasion of each visit?—No.

1256. What number of male attendants do you employ?—Four.

1257. What number of female attendants do you employ?—Three; and then I have some assistants—persons who come in to assist.

1258. I believe that you have two patients paying £100 a-year each?—Yes.

1259. Is there a male attendant to attend exclusively on them?—No, there is not, nor is there any necessity for it. They sleep in the next room to me. They are under the same roof. They have every attendance from my wife and two daughters, and they have the comforts of the family. They dine in our own parlour; and having been a large number of years in Swift's Asylum, and a large number of years with me, they are trained and disciplined, so that they do not require any additional attendance.

1260. Do you furnish clothing to the patients in your establishment for the stipend paid?—No.

1261. Do you find that the friends of the patients usually make suitable provision for clothing them?—Sometimes, but not without repeated application; and when I find they do not send them in proper time, I get clothes myself, but then they pay for them.

THE RICHMOND LUNATIC ASYLUM.

Servant Wrigley, Esq., sworn and examined.

The Richmond Lunatic Asylum.
S. Wrigley, Esq.

1262. Are you the manager of the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—I am.

1263. How long have you held that office?—I am in my twenty-sixth year of office.

1264. Does your wife hold any situation also in the asylum?—She is matron.

1265. Are you a professional person?—I am not.

1266. What was your occupation prior to your being appointed manager of the institution?—Prior to my appointment to my present office, Lord Melbourne established a school in the House of Industry, where there were 300 or 400 lunatic patients, for the purpose of training persons for the lunatic asylums; I was there for two years and a-quarter.

1267. Does your charge extend over all the building, the old as well as the new asylum?—Yes; I have the supervision of all.

1268. You are the manager under the rules and regulations made by the Privy Council of the whole of the buildings comprised in the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—Yes.

1269. State, practically, the course you pursue daily with respect to those various establishments?—I attend to the moral treatment of the patients, and also see after the food and every thing else of that kind. The orders and entries are signed by me. The general business of the house is done by Mrs. Wrigley or me.

1270. To what extent do you visit the establishment, and how often?—I reside in the establishment, and I am frequently through it.

1271. Do you visit each ward in the establishment daily?—I do.

1272. In the new as well as in the old asylum?—I cannot do that. I go up to the new asylum and give directions.

1273. Do you do so daily?—I do not.

1274. As regards the old Richmond Asylum, do you visit each ward in that asylum daily?—I always visit the male asylum, and sometimes the female part, but Mrs. Wrigley visits the females generally, perhaps twice or three times a day.

1275. Do you visit the male wards daily?—I do.

1276. At what hour of the day?—I am sometimes there in the morning, regularly at dinner time, and sometimes in the evening; and in case of necessity I am there at any time I may be wanted, when there would be illness or a sudden outbreak of the patients.

1278. Do you make it your business to make yourself acquainted with the case of each patient, so as to be able to communicate with the medical attendant on the subject?—As far as possible I do.

1279. Do you visit the female wards each night in company with the matron?—I do not; we have established now a night man for the male side, and a night nurse for the female side, and we take their reports every night. We have a report book for the purpose, and if it is necessary we visit.

1280. Am I to understand that you paid no visits to the female side of the institution, except when you considered it necessary in consequence of these reports?—Occasionally I do.

1281. How many visits have you paid to the female side of the establishment in the course of the last month, at night?—I could not say.

1282. Have you made any visits?—I have made some.

1283. Do you regularly inspect the provisions which are received for the institution?—I do.

1284. You have stated that you sometimes visit the female wards, but not daily?—I do not do so daily, but Mrs. Wrigley does.

1285. Has it been your practice since you came to the institution not to pay daily visits?—It has not; when I can attend to it I do.

1286. What has been the practice?—I used to go round every night, but I do not do so now; for there is not a necessity for it since we established the night man and the night nurse.

1287. Were these appointments made by direction of the Board?—They were.

1288. Have the Board made any orders with reference to the visitation of the female wards?—They made no particular orders.

1289. Then, has the practice which you now pursue of only visiting occasionally, been of long duration?—Since the house was enlarged Mrs. Wrigley pays particular attention to the female wards two or three times a day, and I to the male side, and occasionally the female side.

1290. By the enlargement do you mean the period of the enlarging of the old asylum or the period of the erection of the new asylum?—The period of the enlarging of the old asylum, and both. It is a great deal of labour on us.

1291. At what hour of the morning, generally, do you first inspect the male wards?—It would be almost impossible to tell you. I am there sometimes at four, five, or six o'clock in the morning, to prevent irregularities, and I go round the entire concern.

Supervision by the Manager and Matron.

Visits of Manager to wards and grounds.

1292. That visitation of the wards at such an hour cannot enable you to tell whether the duties, which the servants are bound to perform, as regards the washing and cleaning of the patients at their rising, are duly performed?—I would not attempt to go through the wards at that hour; I go round the grounds, and then I come through the wards. It takes me about an hour and a half to go through the grounds.

1293. How often during the past year have you made a daily round of the grounds to which you refer?—I could not tell you. It is merely as a check on the servants for fear they would go out. I have a private key of the house, and I generally go in when the porter is coming down to open the door, that is about six o'clock in the morning.

1294. Have you been out ten times in the course of the last twelve months at this early hour of the morning walking through the grounds?—Indeed I would conceive I have.

1295. Have you been out twenty times?—I would not say that.

1296. Why do you say you would not go round the wards at that early hour?—I would not go round the wards to disturb the patients at that early hour.

1297. What opportunity have you of inspecting the patients by taking a morning walk in the grounds before they are up?—My only object in doing that is to try if the servants are doing their duty.

1298. Is it not to be supposed that the servants are asleep at that hour?—It is to be supposed so; but where there are so many servants they may often get into irregularities, and that is a check upon them.

1299. Then, I am to understand that this morning inspection of the grounds has reference to possible irregularities on the part of the servants, and can in no degree be considered an inspection of the inmates of the wards?—Certainly not.

1300. At what hour of the morning do you usually inspect the male wards?—Latterly I do not go round through the wards so very early; but I am there at, perhaps, seven, or eight, or nine o'clock.

Inspection of male wards.

1301. Are we to understand that you inspect the male wards at some hour every day before ten o'clock?—Yes.

1302. Every day?—I will not say every day; I might be ill, and could not go.

1303. How often within the last month have you inspected the male wards before ten o'clock?—Well, I could not positively say.

1304. Have you inspected the male wards six times within the last month, before ten o'clock in the morning?—Well, I should say so. I would not say all the male wards; but I have gone through them partially.

1305. Have you done so six times before twelve o'clock, within the month?—I have.

1306. Have you done so ten times?—I have. I might have done it more frequently; but I will be cautious in what I say, as I am on my oath.

1307. Are you not aware that it is your duty to do so daily?—It is my duty to go through the wards daily.

1308. Before twelve o'clock?—No; at any time at all.

1309. The 24th Regulation provides: "That the manager shall inspect every portion of the establishment each day before twelve o'clock, and shall personally inspect each patient." Do you comply with that regulation?—As nearly as possible; I could not say I comply with it to the letter.

1310. What means have you of knowing that the patients on the male side are properly washed or cleansed in the morning?—By inspecting them.

1311. If the inspection is not made daily can you possibly determine whether these duties have been performed?—Although I do not make this inspection daily, still I am always expected by the servants; they do not know the moment that I will go in.

1312. Are you satisfied that the possibility of your coming to inspect is sufficient to induce the servants in the establishment to discharge their duties properly?—Decidedly.

1313. Are you satisfied it is sufficient security to you that their duty is discharged?—I am.

1314. Are you satisfied that the subordinate officers who have charge of the male side of the establishment are competent for the discharge of their duties?—Why, generally they are.

1315. In cases where you found that they were not competent, have you ever represented it to the Board?—I have.

Competency of the servants.

1316. Have you had occasion to suspend servants?—Yes.

1317. Have these servants been subsequently dismissed by the Board?—They have.

1318. Are there any of the subordinate officers at present that you consider unfit for their situations?—Why, there are some that are really not fit for them.

1319. Have you made any representations in particular cases to the Board?—Not of late. If possible we keep from discharging the servants. We do every thing we can to teach them their business, and to keep them in their places.

1320. When did you bring under the notice of the Board that the subordinate officers to whom you refer were unfit for their duties?—Well, I cannot exactly tell you the date, but some time ago there were two or three dismissed.

1321. I am asking about those who are now in the house, and whom you think unfit; what representation have you made as to their unfitness?—I have not made any.

1322. Do your observations as to the unfitness of subordinate officers apply to the female as well as to the male attendants?—Why, indeed, appointments have taken place with respect to female attendants that I found rather young for their duties.

1323. Do you mean that they were unfit, from bodily weakness?—I do, some of them.

1324. Are there any of the servants whom you consider too aged for the discharge of their duties?—There are indeed.

DENTON.

The Richmond
District Asylum.

S. Wrigley, Esq.

Penitentiary of old attendants; the late Act.

1325. Have you made any representations with regard to them?—Representations have been made to get them pensioned.

1326. When?—Several times.

1327. Have any steps been taken by the Governors with respect to them?—I believe they have recommended that these servants should get pensions.

1328. Is the fact on record that they recommended they should get pensions?—There is no doubt of it.

1329. To whom did they make the recommendation?—They recommended it to His Excellency or the Under Secretary.

1330. Have any steps been taken under the recent Act of Parliament to pension the servants whom you reported to be unfit?—None; the servants, to be candid with you, think they could not live on the pension that would be granted to them under the Act. That is the way they express themselves.

Washing of patients.

1331. As regards the washing of the patients in the morning—as you do not yourself inspect the wards, so as to enable you to judge whether the duty was done or not—is it not possible that such a duty would be altogether neglected?—It could not be altogether neglected; perhaps a patient or two might be passed over.

1332. Do you mean without your observing it?—No; I could observe it afterwards, when I would be going through the wards.

1333. Who is the immediate officer on the male side, under yourself?—Why, there is no particular officer under me; they are all under me, in fact, but there is no particular officer immediately under me.

1334. Am I to understand that, on the male side, there is no person to see that the patients are properly treated by the attendants, except yourself?—No, there is not. There is a certain number of servants to each division, and each has the supervision of them.

1335. Am I to understand that the only means you take to see whether their duties are performed by the attendants, is this occasional inspection of the wards, at the different hours of the day to which you refer?—Yes, decidedly.

Night attendants;
night inspection.

1336. Is there a night watch in the house?—There is.

1337. Is there a night attendant in each ward?—In each side of the house there is.

1338. At what hour do they come on duty?—They are on duty after seven o'clock, and then they make their report to me before ten o'clock at night.

1339. At what hour do you yourself inspect the wards at night?—It is seldom I go through the wards now, for there is no necessity, as we have a night man and a night nurse. We go occasionally through them.

1340. Do those officers make any report to you in the morning?—They do.

1341. Is that daily?—It is daily. They have a book at each side of the house to report in.

1342. Do you inspect these reports each morning?—Not each morning. The doctors see them occasionally, when there is any thing particular in them.

1343. What are the duties of the night attendants?—They have continually to go through the different galleries. The gas is turned off a little after nine o'clock, and then they have hand lamps; so that if there is any thing occurring in the different rooms or dormitories, they can go in and see what it is, and if assistance is required they may call up the other servants in the house. They are constantly going from one gallery to another.

1344. Do they examine the sleeping-rooms on those occasions—do they look into them?—They do; but it is a bad plan to look into sleeping-rooms when there is no noise. They go in when necessary. Opening the doors would disturb the patients.

1345. Are the duties laid down for the night attendants given to them in writing?—No.

1346. What instructions are given to the night attendants, or were ever given to them?—That they are constantly to go through the wards, and in case of any thing occurring, they are to come down and to report to us, and they have bells to pull for that purpose. One rings in the clinical clerk's room, and the others in each of the various rooms.

1347. What do you mean by "any thing occurring"?—Why, for instance, if a patient gets suddenly ill.

1348. Would the circumstance of a patient getting out of bed, and be found walking about the cell, be considered a reason for the night servant to attend him?—Decidedly.

1349. Have they received any instructions as to patients who are dirty in their habits?—They must attend them and shift them.

1350. If they do not look into their calls, how can they be enabled to discharge this duty properly?—The only answer I can give to that is, that those attendants having lived amongst the patients, they know the dirty patients from the others, and they can pay proper attention to them.

1351. Do the night attendants attend these wards during the day?—They do, after getting a sleep in the morning.

1352. Do you mean that in that manner each man becomes acquainted with the habits of the patients?—Decidedly.

1354. Have they any duty to perform, during the day, in the wards?—They give every assistance they can, after they have had their rest. They go to bed about six o'clock in the morning, when the bell is rung for the others to rise.

1355. With regard to the female side, do you inspect that every night in company with the matron?—I do not.

Inspection of female

DEPUTY.
The Richmond
District Asylum,
S. Wrigley, Esq.
Inspector.

1356. When did you last do that?—I could not tell.
1357. Did you within the last twelve months?—I did.
1358. Did you within the last six months?—I did.
1359. Within the last three months?—Well, I should think I did. We were through it last night.

1360. How often, within the last three months, could you say you have done so?—I really could not say.

1361. Would you say you have done it six times?—I would not. When there is any necessity we always visit, no matter at what hour. We have been frequently up all night, when we had illness in the house.

1362. Do you examine the bedding and state of the beds in the male wards?—Decidedly. Bedding.
1363. Do you usually inspect the male wards before the beds are made up?—Sometimes I do. The sheets and blankets are put out, the windows being opened, to be aired, and then as we go through we examine every room.

1364. What do you do on that examination in each room?—We look to the sheets and blankets, and see that there are no damp sheets about the patients.

1365. Do you take down the beds and examine whether the straw has been properly cleaned out?—Frequently.

1366. In case of dirty patients, are they ever left in their rooms throughout the day?— Dirty patients.
Sometimes patients may be left in the rooms when they are ill.

1367. I ask you as to dirty patients?—They are very seldom left in the rooms.

1368. Do you make it your duty to visit those patients, whose you find on inspection not to have left their cells?—Oh, yes.

1369. Are you prepared to say that you have, practically, each day during the last month, attended to that duty?—There is no doubt in the world of it; I would not say each day, but I very seldom miss a day, indeed.

1370. With regard to the bedding on the male side, do you inspect it yourself with a view to see whether it requires repair, or to be cast and new bedding provided?—Sometimes I do, but Mrs. Wrigley generally does it, and the head nurse.

1371. On the female side, are not those duties entirely performed by the matron?— They are, and by the head nurse.

1372. In inspecting the different divisions, do you examine the state of the lavatories? Lavatories.
—Frequently.

1373. Do you satisfy yourself that they are in working order?—Why, sometimes they are not; they very often go out of order. The plumber is very often in the house engaged repairing them. He is in the house at this moment.

1374. Suppose the cocks did not act, what steps would you take to set them right?— I would send for the plumber. We have no one in the house that understands it.

1375. Supposing the Commissioners found that a considerable number of the cocks in the various lavatories did not act, and apparently had not been used for a long time, how would you account for that?—Well, I cannot see how to account for it; but these cocks, certainly, very often go out of order.

1376. If you made this inspection daily, that you refer to, and that you sent a plumber to set them right on those occasions, could such a state of things exist?—Why, I must certainly confess, I do not go into them every day, and it might occur in the course of a day or two, that they went out of order.

1377. Have you regularly examined the lavatories on the male side six times within the last month?—Indeed I have.

1378. Have you done it ten times?—I should say so, to the best of my knowledge.

1379. Have you done it oftener than ten times?—Well, I could not positively say.

1380. Have you examined the water-closets of the various divisions?—I have, frequently. Water-closets, &c.

1381. In what state have you found them?—Sometimes, indeed, I did not find them in the best state I must certainly confess, and on those occasions, what I did was to punish the servants by stopping what we term their passes, that is, to confine them to the house for a certain time, which has a better effect upon them than even flogging them.

1382. But are the water-closets so constructed that they work satisfactorily even if the servants attend to them?—They do not work satisfactorily.

1383. Are the water-closets in the establishment open for the use of the patients in the several wards?—They are.

1384. Supposing the Commissioners, on inspection, found that all these water-closets, with few exceptions, were locked, how do you consider they were then available for the patients?—One of the water-closets was found locked, but that was done by a nurse for the purpose of keeping it clean for the inspection. It was locked just as the Commissioners were going in. She is certainly one of the worst nurses we have in the house.

1385. Do you inspect the premises in the yards?—I do, occasionally.

1386. Supposing the Commissioners found them in the most filthy condition, would it not argue that your inspection had been attended with very little beneficial result?—It would argue that I had not inspected them for a week or a fortnight before, and that the nurses failed to give me a report about them.

1387. What have you done in consequence of their condition?—Why, I have done nothing; at the present time I have a plumber at them to get them into working order.

1388. I am speaking of the privies?—I have a plumber at them.

1389. Are you not aware that the privy in the wing court of number five was in a disgraceful condition on the occasion of the Commissioners' visit, and for three weeks had been unfit for use?—No, it was not unfit for use; it was certainly bad in appearance when the Commissioners went round. The soil has been baked out of it, and thrown into a waste place behind the house.

DENTIST.

Removal of soil, &amp;c.

1390. Am I to understand that duty is performed by the patients?—The servants, and the patients assist.

1391. What distance had it to be carried?—I suppose about 100 yards.

1392. Was that through the building as well as through another airing court?—They had to carry it through a passage, which is part of the building.

1393. Did you not state to the Commissioners on that occasion, that the sewer in connexion with that privy was not in working order?—I think I did.

1394. What steps have you taken to remedy that defect?—I have got it opened now.

1395. Had it not been for some weeks in that state?—I cannot say.

1396. You do not know whether it had or not?—No.

1397. Were you aware of the state of that privy before we came there?—I was not.

1398. Then you had not examined it for a considerable period?—I had not examined it, I suppose, for nearly a fortnight.

1399. At the period of your last examination, in what condition was it?—It was in tolerable working order at the time.

1400. Has this operation of the transfer of the soil to be frequently carried out by the patients and servants; is that the usual method of cleansing the place?—Yes, when it gets stopped in that way.

Night-chairs.

1401. Are there, in the wards or divisions, any night-chairs for the use of the patients?—There are some.

1402. How many are there in the whole establishment?—I could not tell you that.

1403. Are there three?—Oh, there are more than three.

1404. Is there one in each ward?—Well, I cannot say that.

1405. Are there baths in each ward?—Yes, there are, in each ward.

1406. Are they supplied regularly with hot and cold water?—Not regularly. Whenever the doctors order a warm bath, the warm water is brought up in buckets by the servants.

1407. Is warm water laid on through the wards?—Yes, occasionally.

1408. What do you mean by "occasionally"?—When it is ordered, and at the general washing every Friday.

1409. Am I to understand that there is no warm water available in the wards generally, except on Fridays?—Except on Fridays, and when the physician orders it.

1410. What is the practice as to bathing the patients for the purpose of cleansing, without reference to orders to supply warm water for medical treatment?—They are cleansed in the baths when it is necessary.

1411. Are they bathed each week?—No, I would not say they are bathed each week; they are certainly cleansed as often as it is necessary, and they have the warm water every Friday.

1412. Does each patient who is fit to be bathed get a bath every Friday?—No, each of them is washed every Friday.

1413. Do you mean that their faces and feet merely are washed, or that their persons are put into the bath and washed entirely?—Their faces and their feet up as far as it is necessary. There is a foot-bath.

1414. Then that is not a regular bath?—No; a regular bath is not given, except by order of the doctor.

1415. Am I to understand that it is a foot-bath that is given on Friday?—Yes. If they want it they are washed higher up.

1416. Is there any supply of warm water available throughout the week, except what may be brought up in buckets by the servants?—No.

1417. Are you aware, of your own knowledge, whether any hot water is brought into the wards for the use of the patients on the other days of the week?—I am quite aware of it from my own knowledge.

1418. How are you aware of it?—By being through the house, and I have been in the kitchen and seen it. It is the regular rule every morning to have it brought up.

1419. Do you mean to say that you have been down in the kitchen, and seen the water brought up regularly to the wards at the washing hour?—Yes.

1420. That is at seven o'clock?—About seven o'clock.

1421. Is that your daily practice?—I do not see it every day.

1422. Then you do not know of your own knowledge whether it is done or not?—Why, I do not see it every day, I must certainly say, but when I see it two or three days in the week, I am certain it is done every day. They do not know the moment that I may inspect, or Mrs. Wrigley, down there.

Shower-baths.

1423. Are there shower-baths in each ward?—No; we are getting them now. You might have observed that there was a shower-bath only in each division.

1424. What is the practice as to shower-baths?—They are given according as the doctors order them.

1425. Are they only used when the doctors order them?—Never, except when the doctors order them.

1426. Could the attendants administer a shower-bath to a patient, without the orders of the doctor?—I do not know—we cannot be every where at once—it might happen to be done for any thing that I know, but I never knew it to be done.

1427. Are the shower-baths locked up so that the attendants could not use them for the patients, without the doctor's orders?—The attendants have the keys.

Keys with attendants.

1429. Have you ever had to complain of a patient being put in a shower-bath without the doctor's orders?—Never.
1429. Do you inspect the shower-bath from time to time to see whether it has been used or not?—I frequently inspect it.
1430. How often?—I could not tell you how often; but I do not think the servants would dare to use the bath without permission.
1431. Have you ever received complaints of patients being put in cold baths without your order, as a punishment?—No.
1432. Have you ever had complaints of the servants beating, or otherwise punishing the patients?—Never. A patient may make complaints of that kind, but at the same time, when we make inquiry, we find they are not true.
1433. Do you mean to say that during the twenty-six years you have been in the lunatic asylum, you have never had reason to believe that a statement made by a patient of being ill treated by a servant was correct?—Well, I will not say that. We certainly have found out cases of the kind, and the servants have been dismissed.
1434. What instruments of restraint have you in the asylum?—Why, occasionally, but very seldom, we use the strait-waistcoat; where a patient is tearing bed-clothes or so, we use the chanceller, which we consider no restraint, it only keeps them from tearing.
1435. Describe the chanceller.—It is a sort of bib that comes down near the knees, and is tied round with strings. There is a place for the hands to go down, so that they are kept down, but they can move them backwards and forwards.
1436. What other instruments of restraint have you?—We have the muff occasionally, if a patient's head was rubbed with tartar emetic, to keep him from rubbing that off, and from rubbing their faces or from tearing bed-clothes.
1437. Have you ever had occasion, within the last twelve months, to use these?—Not often; we have used them.
1438. Are patients tied down to their beds?—Occasionally.
1439. Have such cases occurred recently?—Indeed we have had a case or two recently. The object is, as much as any thing else, to keep the patient in the bed, so that he may not be perished at night. Some of them would sit up all night in their rooms.
1440. By whom are the instruments of restraint kept?—They were kept in general by the servants some years ago; but now they are kept, under our charge, by the hall-porter.
1441. Do you mean that the chancellors are so kept?—They are with the servants.
1442. Are the waistcoats with the servants?—They are. There are only one or two in the house.
1443. Do you keep any record of the occasions on which restraint is used?—We have no necessity for keeping it now, it is so seldom; restraint may be used for perhaps only half an hour.
1444. Are you not aware that you are bound to record it in the daily report?—I am, but not restraint for half an hour. If it was necessary to have it on for a day, I would report it.
1445. That is your reading of the regulation, but it is not what the regulation prescribes.—Well, I do not know.
1446. Is seclusion practised?—It is.
1447. To any great extent?—Not to any great extent.
1448. Have you any padded-rooms in the institution?—Why, we have what they term padded-rooms. They are boarded on each side.
1449. Are these any thing more than padded rooms?—Nothing more.
1450. Are the doors of these chambers padded?—No.
1451. Do the attendants, when they use restraint, make any report to you that they have done so?—Decidedly; they dare not do it without coming up to me or Mrs. Wrigley.
1452. Practically, how many such reports have you received within the last three months?—I would not say more than four, or five, or six.
1453. Are they in writing, or verbally?—They bring them up in writing frequently. The servants must come up to my office with the report to me.
1454. Is there any form of report on the subject?—No, there is no particular form.
1455. Do you keep a registry yourself of those cases?—No.
1456. Are any reports made to you of patients having epileptic fits?—Decidedly.
1457. Is it a duty enjoined upon the attendants to make such reports?—Certainly.
1458. Is any record kept of those reports?—No.
1459. Is any entry made that such a patient had experienced so many fits?—There is no record made of it.
1460. Is the occurrence regularly communicated to the medical officer?—It is. I communicate to the hall-porter, and if I should not be in, he tells the matter to the medical officer as he comes in.
1461. Are these facts communicated to the medical officer verbally?—Verbally.
1462. Is there any book kept recording the fact?—No.
1463. Then, in point of fact, if the hall-porter neglected to communicate to the medical officer verbally the statement which you gave him verbally, the medical officer would be ignorant of the occurrence?—Occasionally; but generally I am there, or Mrs. Wrigley, to give the report.
1464. With regard to restraint upon the female side, are the mechanical means of restraint kept by the porter in that case also?—Yes, except the chanceller, and I think one strait-waistcoat on the female side.

Reports from female side.

1465. Can the matron or the attendants get those instruments from the porter without communicating with you?—Decidedly not.

1466. Why do not you keep those things yourself?—One reason is, that I have no place to keep them, and he has a place to keep them locked up.

1467. Are reports made to you from the female side with reference to the number of epileptic fits?—Yes.

1468. Are they verbal or in writing?—They generally come down on a small piece of paper.

From attendants and nurses.

1469. Is it verbally you communicate to the medical attendant, through the porter, or from yourself?—Verbally from myself, or, should I be out of the way, through the porter.

1470. What daily reports are made by the attendants of the various wards, or the head-nurse, to you, and are they in writing?—A report comes from the night-man and the night-nurse.

1471. In writing?—Yes, he has a book for that.

1472. Are there any other reports?—Any other occurrence that may take place in the asylum is made known to us, sometimes on a slip of paper perhaps, or sometimes verbally.

1473. Am I to understand that there is a daily report made, on either side of the house, by the officers in charge of the institution, of any occurrence that may have taken place in the wards during the day?—When it is necessary to report, they do; but it is not a regular daily report.

Ventilation.

1474. Are you enabled to judge whether the ventilation is sufficient in the cells of the inmates?—The ventilation is very good.

1475. Do you yourself visit the galleries and wards, so as to enable you to judge of the state of the ventilation some hours after the patients have retired to rest?—Sometimes I do.

1476. What have you found it to be?—I found the ventilation very good. When the alteration was made, it was very bad; then we made further alterations.

1477. Do you find that the ventilation is as good in the single rooms as in the dormitories, or better?—I think it is very good in the dormitories.

1478. Do you visit any of the wards on the male side in the morning, so as to enable you to judge of the state of the ventilation in them at the time of the patients' rising?—I do occasionally.

1479. What have you found to be the state of the ventilation?—When we have clean patients, the ventilation is very good; but when we have dirty patients, it is not so good—of course you cannot expect it.

1480. Have you ever consulted the attendants as to the state of the ventilation of the wards generally?—I have certainly.

1481. What has been their report on the subject?—Their report generally was, that the ventilation was very good.

1482. Does the system of the ventilation in the building act well?—It does.

1483. Is there a shaft for the extraction of the foul air?—There is not.

1484. Is there any artificial system of ventilation or flues in the building?—None but the windows, and in the top of the rooms there is a grating opening on the airing yards, and at the bottom of the doors there are holes bored.

Supply of water.

1485. Is the supply of water sufficient?—I would say the supply of water is very fair.

1486. Is there a sufficient supply of water at all periods of the day?—Yes, except that in summer we find we are sometimes short.

1487. Is there a sufficient supply of water for the use of the establishment throughout the day?—There is.

1488. In point of fact, are not the cisterns, and lavatories, and bath-rooms, without water the greater part of the day?—Some parts of the day they are, and that occurs when the men are pumping or forcing the water to the top of the house.

1489. That pumping acts upon the supply intended for the cisterns you referred to?—Yes.

1490. How many hours of the day does this pumping go on which interferes with the supply of water?—Sometimes about three hours.

1491. Is the water of good quality?—Indeed it is.

Sewerage.

1492. Is the sewerage of the establishment defective?—It is very bad.

1493. Does it lead to bad smells and other inconveniences in the house?—It is very bad for carrying off the soil.

1494. Have you reported that to the Governors?—I have frequently spoken of it.

1495. Can you show us any report that you made to the Governors on the subject?—I did not make any reports; I was merely speaking of it.

1496. No steps have therefore been taken, I suppose, to improve the sewerage?—No steps have been taken. We have often to cleanse them out, and a very troublesome thing it is when they get choked up.

Furniture.

1497. What furniture is there in the corridors for the use of the patients—are there any chairs?—Yes.

1498. In each corridor?—Not in each.

1499. How many chairs are there in all the corridors of the establishment?—I could not say.

1500. Are there a dozen?—There are not.

1501. How many corridors may there be?—There are twenty-four corridors.

1502. Are there any other articles of furniture in the corridors?—Nothing more.

1503. What furniture is there in the day-rooms?—They have nothing but the forms and tables.

1504. No chairs?—No chairs, except it is necessary to bring in one when there is a patient ill or delicate, for him to rest, which is frequently done.

1505. Have any of the benches got backs to them?—No.

1506. Are there any dining-rooms for the patients, or do they dine in their respective day-rooms?—In their respective day-rooms.

1507. Is there any recreation-hall?—There is nothing more than the galleries and day-rooms.

1508. What steps do you take for the amusement of the inmates?—Why, the only amusement that they have is, that they are frequently out playing ball, and they have draught-boards.

1509. How many draught-boards are there in the establishment?—Indeed we got one for every division in the house, and the most of them are gone now. I do not know how they went.

1510. How many are there at this moment in the establishment?—I could not tell you.

1511. Ball-playing is, of course, confined to the male patients; what amusement is there provided for the female patients?—In general, once a-week, or sometimes twice, they get a dance; we have music playing for them.

1512. Where?—In the day-room.

1513. In each day-room?—No, they are brought together from every part of the house.

1514. Do you undertake to say that takes place once every week?—Sometimes oftener, but certainly once.

1515. Are there any books for the use of the inmates?—There are a great many.

1516. Where are they kept?—In the school-room.

1517. Are there any beside school-books?—There are.

1518. How many?—A great many. Yesterday five pounds' worth of books came into the house. They are ordered these last two months.

1519. What class of books are these?—Novels, and travels, and such things of that kind.

1520. Are those distributed throughout the different wards, or kept in the school-room?—They are kept in the school-room, but occasionally they are distributed throughout the different wards.

1521. What do you mean by "occasionally"?—When they are wanted.

1522. Who goes for them when they are wanted?—The servants.

1523. Are the servants themselves intelligent, and capable of reading and writing?—Yes.

1524. Do the servants make any reports to you, or to the mistress, with reference to the books required?—To the mistress, and sometimes to me, and sometimes with Mrs. Wrigley.

1525. Can you state how many patients, on an average, attend school?—About from fourteen to eighteen, and then the servants attend in winter.

1526. Is there a paid schoolmistress?—Yes.

1527. Have you described all the amusements which are afforded in the establishment to patients?—I do not know of any others, except that they sometimes play cards.

1528. Am I to understand that the attendants in each ward are not provided with books for the patients, but that whenever a book is required, they have to go and ask the schoolmistress?—Yes; and ask Mrs. Wrigley, or myself.

1529. Are there, in any of the corridors or day-rooms, any prints on the walls, or any subject of interest of any kind?—None.

1530. You have stated that you examined the provisions for the house?—Yes.

1531. Do you generally attend to see that the proper allowance is provided for each of the patients in the distribution of the food when cooked?—I do; both Mrs. Wrigley and myself.

1532. Do you see the medical attendant on each day that he visits the institution?—Every day; indeed I seldom miss a day seeing him.

1533. Your infirmary is, I believe, a detached building?—It is.

1534. Are the patients sent there from both the asylums?—They are.

1535. The chapel, in like manner, is a detached building?—Yes.

1536. Are there regular paid chaplains?—Yes, there are.

1537. Do you ever inspect the infirmary?—Yes, repeatedly.

1538. How often?—I could not tell you how often, for I am constantly up in the grounds.

1539. Do you go once a week to the infirmary?—I do.

1540. Twice a week?—Yes, and sometimes three times a week, and sometimes, perhaps, not in the week at all, when I have other business to attend to.

1541. I believe the establishment is lighted with gas?—It is.

1542. Is there any system in operation for the warming of the corridors and apartments of the establishment?—Nothing more than the common fireplaces.

1543. Are those fireplaces in the galleries used in winter?—Always.

1544. Is the house damp?—It is damp whenever there is a sudden change in the weather.

1545. Is there any record kept of the temperature?—There is not.

1546. Are thermometers in use in the apartments?—No, indeed.

1547. Are there store-rooms in each ward for the articles in the charge of the nurses?—Yes, there are.

1548. Are not some of the lavatories turned into store-rooms?—Yes, there are.

1549. Are the airing-courts spacious?—They are.

1550. Some of them, I believe, are entirely surrounded by buildings?—Four of them are surrounded entirely by buildings, and there are four outside the building.

1551. The airing courts which are included within the buildings must be entirely in the shade for certain periods of the day?—Yes, some of them.

1552. Are they laid out with grass or trees?—Yes, they are, with grass; one tree in each, and some of them have a great deal more.

1553. What sort of bedsteads are in general use?—Iron. Formerly we had wooden bedsteads; we have some wooden bedsteads still.

1554. Which do you prefer?—I would prefer the wooden bedsteads.

1555. Do the patients usually sleep on straw?—Yes, on straw.

1556. Are ticks provided to receive the straw?—Yes.

1557. In each case?—In each case.

1558. Do not patients sleep upon loose straw?—The dirty patients sleep on loose straw, which we find the most comfortable for them. There is a sheet under them. All the others have comfortable ticks.

1559. Am I to understand that every patient in the house has a pair of sheets?—Yes, every patient; and a pair of blankets.

1560. Are proper chamber utensils provided in each apartment?—Yes.

1561. If, on inspection, the Commissioners found such not to be the case, how do you account for the fact?—Why, they might not be under the beds at the time, but for every bed there is a chamber utensil.

1562. Are combs and brushes provided in the several lavatories for the patients?—We have no brushes, but there are combs.

1563. Is soap provided?—Soap for every one of them.

1564. Do you see that yourself?—Oh, yes; there is a certain quantity of soap given every week for the patients' use.

1565. What quantity?—I think it is half a pound of soap goes to each division.

1566. Do you satisfy yourself, by inspection, that soap is actually used?—I do. We know it is used.

1567. What supply of towels is afforded to each ward?—It is rollers we have for the patients, and there are towels provided for the physicians, and also basins.

1568. How many rollers are allowed to each division in the week?—About two in the week for each.

1569. On an average, what is the number of patients in each division?—In one division we have fifty patients, and in another forty-one. By divisions I mean wards.

1570. What is the smallest number of patients in any one ward or division?—Thirteen.

1571. Can you furnish the Commissioners with a copy of the dietary in use in the establishment, if we require it?—Yes.

1572. Is there any notification in each ward of the names of the patients on extra diet, and of the allowance of extra diet to which they are entitled?—Any extra diet ordered is by the doctor, and when a different diet from the regular diet is required, then the regular diet is stopped, and the other is given.

1573. Is there a statement of that hung up in the ward?—It is always entered in the doctor's book.

1574. Is a copy of that given to the nurse?—She has the book in custody; she comes down to me and shows me the book.

1575. Can you state the proportion of the inmates who are at present on extra diet?—I could not at this moment.

1576. Do you consider the presence of the inmates at religious worship to be attended with advantage?—I do; and I must say it was I that first established it.

1577. How many paid chaplains are attached to the institution?—Two paid chaplains.

1578. Do they attend the house on any occasions to instruct the patients?—Frequently.

1579. What other officers are attached to the old Richmond Asylum?—We have a clerk and storekeeper, and we have an accountant, who acts as secretary to the Board.

1580. What medical officers are attached to the old asylum?—Dr. Mollan and Dr. Tuohill; and Surgeon Hughes attends the new and old asylums.

1581. Does he attend any patients in the old and new asylums, or does he merely attend the hospitals?—He attends the patients.

1582. Is the attendance of Drs. Mollan and Tuohill confined to the old asylum?—Yes; and Dr. Banks attends the new.

1583. Is there any apothecary?—Yes; a resident apothecary.

1584. Are there any clinical clerks?—Yes, two.

1585. By whom are they paid?—By the Board, out of the regular funds.

1586. Are there any regulations as to the duty of the clinical clerks?—Why, there are. They are obliged to attend the patients in the absence of the doctors, and to go round with the doctors as they attend.

1587. Are they qualified to act in case of sudden illness?—Yes.

1588. Have they been called on so to act?—Repeatedly.

1589. Have any cases occurred of patients dying before the doctor was summoned?—No, I have not known of any.

1591. These places are upwards of a mile from the asylum?—Fully that distance.

1592. Have you had any suicide cases requiring the immediate presence of the medical man?—There was a case of a man who hung himself in the new asylum.

1593. What precautions are taken with reference to cases entering the asylum which are known to be suicidal cases?—The precaution taken is, to put them sleeping in the dormitories, and never to let them sleep by themselves. They are put into dormitories where there are patients upon whom we may place some little confidence to have an eye upon them and watch them.

1594. Does any attendant sleep in or adjoining the dormitory?—Adjoining it.

1595. Within call?—Yes, within call.

1596. What means of communication is there from the dormitory to the attendant's room—is there a bell or other means of calling?—No, the night-man going round would give an alarm.

1597. He would only give an alarm, if he chanced to be in the vicinity of the dormitory at the time?—Decidedly so.

1598. Have you had more than one case of suicide?—I am very near twenty-eight years connected with the asylum, and there were only three cases of suicide. One woman jumped out of a window, and a man cut his throat with an oyster-shell. He was not dead when he was found. He was an infirmity patient, and he did this in the open grounds.

1599. You have stated that you are manager of the asylum, and have supervision over the two buildings called the new and old Richmond Asylum?—Yes.

1600. What duties do you discharge in the new asylum?—I merely go up there and visit. We go through it, and give directions as to any thing we happen to see wrong.

1601. How often in the week do you go up there?—I might go twice there, and Mrs. Wrigley goes twice more.

1602. On those occasions do you go through all the wards?—Not all.

1603. When were you last through the wards of the new asylum?—I declare I could not tell you when I was through all the wards. I have been through some of them last week.

1604. Then you do not consider that you are responsible for the discharge of the duties of manager as regards that building?—I consider that I have the supervision of it; that I ought to go up there occasionally, and give directions about it.

1605. How are you enabled to give full and complete directions as regards the patients, unless you go round the wards to see them?—I do not go round all the wards; I go through some of them, and by giving directions for one, it answers for all.

1606. Are the Commissioners to understand that you consider visiting ward A, and giving directions as to patients there, enables you to give directions with regard to the patients in ward B, whom you never visited?—I do not say that. Mrs. Wrigley goes through every ward in the house, and gives me a report when I do not go.

1607. I believe that establishment is only for males at present?—Yes.

1608. Has it always been so?—We had female patients in it at one time. It was the time when the cholera broke out in 1834.

1609. What arrangements are made, when patients come to be admitted, as to the building to which they should be sent, whether the old or the new asylum?—There is no particular arrangement about that; it is according as we have vacancies. They are always admitted through the old asylum.

1610. How do you mean admitted through the old asylum?—They come there, and I see them at the old asylum, where they are admitted, and then I send them to the new building, if they are to go there. I distribute the patients who are admitted.

1611. Supposing vacancies to exist in both asylums, what principle do you follow in allocating the patients to one or the other?—Dr. Banks came to the conclusion that it would be only fair that he should get patients in the same way with us—that if we got a recent case to-day, and another came in to-morrow, he should get it.

1612. Has that been acted upon?—It has.

1613. Have not patients who have been some time in the old asylum, been transferred frequently from that to the new asylum?—No, very seldom. They go up to the infirmary, and frequently they go from the infirmary to the new asylum to make room for the cases there.

1614. No classification is made, therefore, as regards the use of the new or the old asylum particularly, for some cases?—No.

1615. Have you ever been in the habit of sending suicidal patients from the old asylum to the new asylum?—They get suicidal cases as well as we do on admission.

1616. Is that understanding which you state was come to with the physician of the new asylum recorded anywhere?—No, there is no record of it.

1617. Have the Governors made any regulations as to the disposal of cases admitted between the two asylums?—No, they have not; it is just left between us, the doctor and myself.

1618. Are the patients usually in a very debilitated state when admitted?—Not usually; but we get a good many in a very debilitated state. We got a man recently, and he was only six days in the asylum when he died.

1619. Do the physicians, Drs. Tuckhill and Mollen, take any steps with regard to allocating the patients either to one asylum or the other?—They do.

1620. If the admissions are to be sent alternately to the old and new asylums, how do the doctors interfere?—In that case, the doctors do not interfere. If they happen to be in the house when a patient is admitted, they might advise for that person to go to one house or the other.

1631. Would the advice given by the doctors on that occasion supersede the arrangements to which you refer?—Decidedly.

1632. What part do the physicians take as regards the classification of inmates in the old asylum?—The physicians, in going through the asylum, if they see a patient or two in one division that they thought would be better in another, would tell us to remove them; they request we will do so.

1633. Are the patients removed from one division to another without the directions of the physicians?—Sometimes it is the case. If we meet a violent case, for instance, in a ward, the windows of which have no shutters, Mrs. Wrigley herself would remove the patient to a place where there was security against danger in this respect.

1634. Are patients removed to the refractory wards who may not be refractory, but who may have attempted to escape?—Sometimes.

1635. Without consulting the physician?—Oh! certainly.

1636. How is the hospital accommodation divided between the two asylums?—There is no regular division between them. If patients are ill, either in the new asylum or the old, they are sent to the hospital.

1637. With regard to admissions into the asylum, are the majority of applications from the city of Dublin?—There are a great many of the applications from the city of Dublin.

1638. Is there any arrangement made as to the proportion in which the counties should have patients admitted?—Not at all: we admit them as we have vacancies, either from the city, or from the counties connected with the district.

1639. Have the Board before them on each board-day any statement of the number of lunatics who may be detained in gaols within the district waiting for removal?—No, they have not. They get the warrants regularly.

1640. Then the admissions on board-days are made without reference to the number of patients who may be in gaol, and may be fit subjects for admission to the asylum?—Always without reference to that.

1641. Are the Board of Governors regular in their attendance?—They are.

1642. What is the average number that attend?—The average number is about five.

1643. Are they usually from the county and city of Dublin, or from other counties?—Usually from the county and city of Dublin.

1644. Is any visiting-committee appointed by the Governors to inspect the asylum?—Yes.

1645. Do the Board of Governors themselves ever inspect the asylum?—They do sometimes, but not often.

1646. When did the Board of Governors last go round the various wards and inspect the house?—I could not tell that.

1647. Have they done it within the last twelve months?—They may have been in some of the divisions, but not to inspect generally.

1648. Do any of the Governors ever visit the institution on other days besides those of the regular meeting?—Not lately.

1649. Has any Governor within the last two years, between the regular meetings, inspected the asylum, in whole or in part?—In part they have.

1650. Do the Governors visit the new asylum?—No, they do not.

1651. How long has it been open?—It is open upwards of two years.

1652. Have they ever visited it since it was opened?—They have been up there.

1653. When was their last visit?—I could not tell you that.

1654. Do you inspect the provisions sent to the new asylum?—Yes, it all comes through the old asylum.

1655. How are you enabled to ascertain whether the patients receive their regular diet at the new asylum?—Why we sometimes go through it, and see that they do; but not often, for we have a good deal to attend to at the old asylum, and there are two persons at the new one to attend to those things.

1656. Under whose superintendence are the grounds attached to the new asylum?—Principally under mine. The resident apothecary is obliged to employ a man there.

1657. Who keeps the accounts of the farm-management of the land?—The accounts are kept in the old asylum; but we sell no vegetables now. We did so, and used to make about £35 an acre.

1658. How many patients, on an average, are employed working on the ground attached to the asylum?—About thirty-four.

1659. Does that comprise those from the new asylum?—No, there are others employed in that asylum.

1660. Do you know how many are employed there?—I cannot tell you rightly. I should say about twenty or twenty-two.

1661. Have any steps been taken to lay out in a suitable manner the grounds attached to the new asylum?—A good part has been planted; but at the same time, from the alterations we understand are likely to take place, there is nothing done in the front to signify.

1662. Do you direct what is to be done in the grounds attached to the new asylum, or do you consult the resident apothecary about it?—We do consult on some occasions, but not generally.

1663. Do you know what work is going on at present at the grounds of the new asylum?—No, I was not there to-day; but I know what is going on at the old asylum.

1664. Where do the thirty-four men that you refer to work?—In what we term the old grounds.

1655. Do you keep any record of the patients employed from day to day?—Yes.
1656. Will that appear from any of your books?—It will.
1657. Is all the produce of the grounds now consumed in the asylum?—It is all consumed now in the asylum; I used to sell a great deal of it for the benefit of the house, but the Governors, since the establishment increased so much, desired me not to sell any, but to give the patients vegetables six days in the week.
1658. Are you allowed to keep any stock yourselves?—I am allowed to keep pigs.
1659. Is that ordered by the Board?—It is ordered by the Board upwards of twenty-four years.
1660. And are the pigs maintained from the produce of the land?—They are maintained from the waste about the house.
1661. Are there any poultry?—Yes, we have some hens.
1662. Are there any stables or offices used by you?—Yes, there is a stable for my own horse.
1663. Are there any places of recreation for the patients in the new asylum?—Yes, there are the siring yards, and they walk about round the old ground.
1664. Are there any other places of recreation, ball-courts or such?—There is a ball-court.
1665. Is there more than one ball-court?—There are two.
1666. How is the second used?—I believe Mr. Beatty, the resident apothecary, has some pigs in it.
1667. Is the ball-court generally used by the patients?—It is used occasionally. Indeed, I wish it was not there, it creates great ill-will amongst the servants.
1668. Is it used principally by the servants?—If I am not in the way, they use it, and when I happen to go up there, I will see the servants frequently, the moment they see me, run off in all directions.
1669. Has your exact position in reference to the new asylum been laid down, or settled by the Governors in any resolution or order, of which you can furnish a copy?—There was a resolution that Mrs. Wrigley and I should have the supervision, and that Mr. Beatty should be appointed resident apothecary.
1670. What was Mr. Beatty before?—He was apothecary to the house.
1671. Is there a deputy-matron in charge of the new asylum?—Yes, there is; Miss Blandell is deputy-matron, resident in the new asylum, sitting under Mrs. Wrigley.
1672. If any thing should be wanted in the new asylum how is it brought under the notice of the Board of Governors?—We have a regular Ward Book for the new and old asylum, and that is brought before the Governors once a month.
1673. Are the wants of the new asylum communicated to you by the resident apothecary?—Yes, and by Miss Blandell.
1674. Is there a separate Morning Statement Book kept in the new asylum?—I keep that book entirely myself for both asylums.
1675. Is that book which you keep in the old asylum signed by Dr. Banks, the physician to the new asylum, so far as it is concerned?—No, he does not sign that.
1676. In what book does he enter his visits?—There is a book there, I think, for him; I am not certain, indeed.
1677. Is there any other Morning Statement Book, as to the new asylum, laid before the Board, except that kept by you?—No.
1678. Have the Board any record of Dr. Banks's visits to the new asylum?—They have no record of them. I meet him there every day.
1679. Is not the manager responsible for the accuracy of the returns made in the Morning Statement Book?—Certainly.
1680. Do you derive the materials for the returns you make as to the new asylum from information conveyed to you by Mr. Beatty?—Yes.
1681. Are you acquainted with the facts, from your own knowledge, as to the new asylum, which are set forth in the Morning Statement Book?—I am not; I only know them from the returns I get from the resident apothecary.
1682. Are any, and what, books of registry, kept at the new asylum, by the resident apothecary there?—There is no particular book, except the Doctor's Registry Book, and an account of costs.
1683. Can you furnish us with a copy of the form of statement, which Mr. Beatty sends to you each morning from the new asylum?—I procure forms printed, and he sends them down to me signed by himself. [The Morning Statement Book is here produced.]
1684. You produce the Morning Statement Book of the two asylums?—It is the Morning Statement Book; but so far as the new asylum is concerned, it contains only the number of inmates in that asylum.
1685. Then, in point of fact, the various headings of this Morning Statement Book are not filled up as regards the new asylum, with one exception, namely, the total number of patients therein?—Yes, that is all.
1686. Then, in point of fact, you keep no book which contains the required statements as to the several patients in the new asylum?—I keep only the account I tell you of, the numbers that are in the asylum regularly, those discharged, and the deaths.
1687. Are the Commissioners to understand that the only record in the Morning Statement Book, as regards the new asylum, is the number of patients, and that it contains no information as to the employment of the patients?—Yes. Every thing is recorded as to the admissions, the discharges, and the deaths.

- Dumas. 1688. The admissions, the discharges, and the deaths at the new asylum?—Yes.
 1689. I see no entry here as to the attendance of the physician at the new asylum?—No, he does not sign that book.
 1690. Then, that part of the Morning Statement Book is not kept?—No, he does not sign his name there; he never did since he came.
 1691. As you receive no statement whatever from the new asylum to enable you to make up this return, you are not enabled to tell whether there were or not persons under restraint or in seclusion last week in the new asylum?—No, I cannot tell.
 1692. Is there a Medical Journal as required by the 8th and 9th Vic., cap. 107, sec. 25, kept in the old asylum?—No.
 1693. Do you keep such a journal?—No.
 1694. Does the General Registry Book which you keep contain a registry of the inmates of the new asylum as well as the old?—Yes.
 1695. Do the provision books for the old asylum contain an account of the provisions supplied for the new asylum?—They do.
 1696. Do the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums frequently visit the asylum?—They do, very frequently.
 1697. Where do they make records of their visits?—They make no records of their visits. They attend nearly every board-day—they are Governors.
 1698. Is there any visiting or observation book kept in the asylum?—There is a Visiting Book.
 1699. Where is it?—I have not got it here; I did not think it would be required.
 1700. Do the Inspectors-General of Lunatic Asylums visit frequently between the meetings of the Board?—They do.
 1701. Upon any of these occasions do they enter minutes or observations in any book?—Never.
 1702. Where is the book called the Memorandum Book of things to be brought under the notice of the Governors?—There is no Memorandum Book.
 1703. In what way do you submit to the Board any recommendations you have to make, or any communications you may desire to convey?—Generally in writing.
 1704. Are those writings recorded in any book?—Every thing is recorded in that Minute Book, which is produced, of whatever is done at the Board.
 1705. In what book are recorded the observations which you wish to make for the consideration of the Board?—Why, the one book tells all we want, except there is any thing particular, and that we send in, in writing, on paper.
 1706. On sheets of paper?—Yes.
- John Mollan, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S., sworn and examined.
 1707. I believe you are physician to the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—Yes.
 1708. For what period have you been connected with that institution?—For a period of twenty years. I was first appointed physician extraordinary, at the time Dr. Jackson was the then physician. He was a person advanced in life, and afterwards became incompetent to take charge of the asylum continuously; and, by an arrangement with Dr. Jackson, on my appointment as physician extraordinary, I undertook to discharge the duties, he coming occasionally as consulting physician.
 1709. Did you succeed Dr. Jackson?—I succeeded Dr. Jackson, who died in 1848.
 1710. Was any person associated with you in the discharge of your duties after you succeeded Dr. Jackson?—There was always a surgeon attached to the institution. He continued to attend.
 1711. Was any one appointed your successor as physician extraordinary?—Yes, Dr. Tushill.
 1712. I believe the physician extraordinary received no salary that time?—He received no salary.
 1713. Has he since become a paid officer of the institution?—He has.
 1714. What arrangement is made between you and your colleague, Dr. Tushill, as to the discharge of your duties?—We divide the duties between us in the old establishment, and we have nothing to do with the new asylum, and never had any thing to do with it.
 1715. What is the nature of the arrangements—does Dr. Tushill take charge of a peculiar class of patients?—No; originally the old asylum was equally divided between males and females; and, when Dr. Tushill became permanent physician, he took charge of the male side of the house, and I took charge of the female.
 1716. Does that arrangement still exist?—That arrangement still exists, that is to say, he takes charge of one side of the house, and I of the other; but it is altogether changed by the appropriation of the new asylum exclusively for males, and some females being accommodated at the side of the establishment which was originally altogether for males.
 1717. One half of the building is under the charge of one physician, and the other half under the charge of another?—Yes, and the infirmary likewise; when Dr. Tushill was appointed, he took the male and I took the female division of the infirmary.
 1718. Do you now attend the infirmary?—I have not done so for the last year and a-half. On one occasion, when I was in ill health, I went to the Continent, and Dr. Banks and Dr. Tushill discharged the duties, and I requested Dr. Banks to continue to attend the infirmary department for me.
 1719. When cases of sickness are removed to the infirmary, what arrangement is made for medical attendance upon them?—Dr. Banks attends the females; Dr. Tushill the males.

1720. What duties does the surgeon perform—does he merely act in surgical cases?—Merely in those cases.

1721. Whether they arise in the house or in the infirmary?—Yes, anywhere, no matter in what part.

1722. The charge of the patients in the old asylum being equally divided according to the wards, between Dr. Tuckhill and yourself, do you ever visit the wards under his charge, and does he ever visit the wards under your charge?—No, except by my special request.

1723. Have you kept a separate Case Book of the patients who were under your charge?—I keep a registry only of the patients under my charge.

1724. Do you direct the moral treatment also only of those under your charge?—Yes, only of those.

1725. Do you keep a Medical Journal?—Not a regular one; I call the registry one.

Medical Journal.

1726. Do you keep a Medical Journal as contained in the schedule to the 8th and 9th Vic., cap. 107?—Something similar to that.

1727. But you do not keep it in that form?—That is not exactly the form in which I keep it; there are more headings in mine.

1728. Has your attention ever been called to the provision of the Act which requires the journal to be kept?—I have not been made aware of that Act.

1729. Where is the book to which you refer kept?—It is sometimes in my possession at home, and sometimes at the asylum.

1730. What arrangement is made, when patients are admitted, as to the wards in which they are to be placed?—When patients are admitted, they are generally placed in some ward according to circumstances or convenience in one respect, and the condition of the patient in the other.

Distribution of patients.

1731. Is that done by consultation between you and Dr. Tuckhill?—Not at all; it is done by the manager.

1732. Has he the sole discretion of disposing of the cases admitted as he pleases?—That is in the first instance. He sends them in the ward according to circumstances, subject afterwards, of course, to my control. When I find a patient newly arrived in a ward, I have the power to place him where I please.

1733. Is there any classification of the patients by your directions in the asylum?—There is a general classification—I can hardly call it a scientific classification; it is a classification according to the circumstances of each particular case. As a general rule, No. 5 is considered the refractory ward, and 6 and 7 are for patients less violent and less troublesome; and then Nos. 8 and 9 and the wings are gradations; but there is no rule as to the exact condition of the patients that may be placed in any of those. I may remark we have seldom a choice; the institution is so constantly crowded, that we are obliged to accommodate patients as best we may.

Classification.

1734. You have stated that patients may be removed by your direction from one ward to another—is the manager also authorized to remove patients without your directions?—I cannot say that I ever objected to him or the matron doing so. I found that a common practice when I came to the asylum, but I have not known it done contrary to my opinion.

1735. Do you consider that such a power should be vested in the manager, he being a non-professional person?—It is sometimes unavoidable that some person on the spot should have the power of doing it.

1736. What communication takes place between you and the manager as regards the various cases in the house?—At present, I can hardly say there is any regular communication. When I was originally appointed, the house was much smaller than it is at present—that is to say, the accommodation was much less; and the practice was for Mr. Wrigley to accompany me round the house, and he made such remarks to me as he thought were advisable as regards the patients.

Communication with the Manager respecting cases.

1737. What is the practice now?—Mr. Wrigley never accompanies me; I go round the house, and make afterwards any communications to Mr. Wrigley that I think right.

1738. Do you know of any reason for the change?—Yes, it arose from the circumstance of Mr. Wrigley's attention being otherwise directed.

1739. How do you mean otherwise directed?—When the ground on which the new asylum now stands was first procured, Mr. Wrigley's attention was drawn off from the business of the asylum—that is, from the internal concerns of the asylum—and a good deal engaged in the farming; so much so, that he did not continue to accompany me, regularly at least, round the asylum; and from that time up to the present, his other duties, or what he considers his duties, have almost entirely taken up his time. At all events, the result has been, since that period, there has been a gradual relaxation of his attention to the internal duties, and it is devoted to other matters.

1740. You are not, therefore, in the habit of communicating with any person who is enabled to afford you information as to the condition of the cases from daily observation?—No, except the nurses.

1741. Are the nurses persons of sufficient intelligence for the purpose?—Not many of them.

The nurses; their competency.

1742. Do you think generally they are a class of servants suited for the care of lunatics?—Very few of them.

1743. Considering that Mr. Wrigley was a non-professional person, were the communications he was formerly in the habit of making to you in reference to cases in the house of any general value?—So far as any thing that I directed, with regard to the moral treatment and management of the patients, I felt confident it would be carried out by him.

DUBLIN.

The Richmond District Asylum, J. Mollan, Esq., M.D.
Professional, not as Managers, division of medical duties and responsibility.

1744. Do you consider it would be more advisable to have a professional person in his situation?—Most distinctly.

1745. Would you consider that professional person should be at all responsible for the medical treatment of the patients?—I think that any person holding that position ought to be responsible; unquestionably he ought to get immediate charge of the patients.

1746. What responsibility, then, would rest upon the visiting physician in that case?—The responsibility of the visiting physician would be chiefly as a consulting physician. That would depend very much upon the class of person that would be appointed to the charge of the asylum; but it would be very desirable that there should be, in addition to the ordinary medical attendant, a visiting physician—I speak of the large asylums.

1747. Is it not advisable that their duties should be so accurately defined as to guard against a clashing of authority?—There would be very little difficulty in arranging that, if men were well disposed and cordially united for the object to be accomplished.

1748. Do you consider any inconvenience would arise from a divided or uncertain responsibility, if the duties of each were not properly defined?—Well, there might be, to be sure.

1749. Would you propose that the medical manager should carry on solely the treatment of the patients as regards lunacy, and that the attendant, as a consulting physician, should be only required as the manager might think proper?—I would say, that I would leave it discretionary with the ordinary medical attendant. It would be much better, according to my view, that the visiting physician should go every day, or every second day, according to the number of patients and the extent of the asylum, and go round the asylum with the other.

1750. You consider the visiting physician, although there would be a medical manager, should still be conversant with each case, and be regarded as the medical officer in charge of the patients?—Not so much that, as that he should give his opinion generally in any complication of diseases occurring of a serious character.

1751. Am I to understand that you would wish the position of the medical manager to be the same as that of a house-surgeon in an hospital?—Yes, I would wish to have him more in that capacity.

1752. Would you allow the opinion of the visiting physician to prevail in case of a difference as to the treatment to be pursued?—I would say yes, if I am to regard the thing as it is generally settled in consulting with medical men. The consultant is looked upon as the superior, and his opinion has more weight. I am speaking now of private practice.

1753. Then I understand you do consider the opinion of the visiting physician should prevail?—Yes.

1754. In cases where the special attendance of the visiting physician was not required, with whom would the responsibility of the case rest?—With the medical superintendent. I would consider him in immediate charge of all the patients, and that the other went round with him, and gave him his opinion on each case.

1755. Having stated that the opinion of the visiting physician, when called upon by the medical superintendent to give an opinion, should decide what treatment ought to be pursued, do you consider that the opinion of the visiting physician should, in like manner, prevail in all those cases which he might, on inspection, consider it advisable to give his opinion upon, whether it be desired by the superintendent or not?—No, I should think not. I should say rather, leave it with the medical superintendent to bring such cases under his notice. I would not consider that the visiting physician should in every case interfere; but his visits should be regular, and should not be merely when called upon. I would have them periodical and regular.

1756. The position, then, of the visiting physician, under the arrangements you propose, would be more that of a consulting physician?—More that of a consulting physician.

1757. I gather from your statement that you would not consider it advisable to leave an institution of this kind entirely in the charge of one resident medical man?—I would not.

1758. Are you of the same opinion with reference to small asylums?—Very much would depend upon the number of patients.

1759. Say an asylum of 150 patients?—I would say it would be much better in that case that there should be a second physician.

1760. Supposing the visiting physician, on his regular visit, observed treatment pursued with regard to a patient of which he did not approve, would you consider that he should still allow that treatment to be continued, because he had not been called upon by the resident medical superintendent to give his opinion in the case?—Certainly not. I think, in such a case as that, a man should volunteer his opinion.

1761. Then, in point of fact, the visiting physician is to advise, and his opinion is to prevail, not alone in the cases in which he is called upon to give an opinion, but in cases he may consider improperly treated by the resident medical superintendent?—Yes.

1762. You have stated that you have not been attended by the manager in your visits through the asylum for some time—does the matron usually attend?—She does not regularly go round with me.

1763. As I understand, you have been, for the last eight years, in charge entirely of the female patients?—Of the female patients exclusively; but not for so long a period; about five years; subsequently to the appointment of Dr. Teakill, as physician in ordinary.

1764. Used the manager accompany you to the female wards?—Yes.

1765. Was that by your desire?—Yes; I know of nothing else.

1766. Has the attention of the Board, that you are aware of, ever been called to the non-attendance of the manager upon you in your visits?—No.

The Visiting Physician, his position in relation to the Medical Manager.

Visitation of the wards by the Manager.

1767. Are you aware whether they made any regulations with reference to the attendance of the manager in the various wards?—I am not aware that they have done so at all.

1768. Or with reference to his own duty with regard to the visitation of the wards?—I am not aware.

1769. Are you aware of the practice of the manager with regard to his visits of inspection to the several wards?—I believe that, hitherto, they have been comparatively few. I never see him in the female wards. He goes round the male wards, I know. When I say I know that, I mean that I have seen him at particular times do so.

1770. Do you know of any reason for the omission of his visits to the female wards?—There is no special reason, except what I have already assigned, as to his other duties.

1771. Are the patients, in respect of cleanliness, treated as you would desire?—Not at all times.

1772. To what do you attribute that?—I think there is a want of proper care and attendance. Generally speaking, I do not think there is proper care taken of the patients; it might certainly be better.

1773. Do you think there is proper attention paid to their washing?—I am speaking now of the females. I think there is pretty fair attention. I have not much to complain of in that respect.

1774. Are you in the habit of making any observations in any book with reference to anything which you may conceive to require amendment?—No, there is no book of the kind.

1775. In what manner would you communicate to the Board any thing you would desire to have done?—I never made special communications of the kind to the Board; I have often spoken to Mrs. Wrigley, and to the nurses, when I have seen any thing amiss.

1776. Then there is no written statement?—No.

1777. What is the earliest hour at which you are in the habit of visiting the hospital?—Seldom before twelve o'clock.

1778. Have you reason to believe that the several wards have been recently inspected by the manager before you arrive?—I could not say at present with regard to the manager; formerly it was the practice for both the matron and the manager to visit.

1779. Are you satisfied with the ventilation of the establishment?—I would say, generally, the ventilation is pretty good, except in some of the cells—some of the single bedrooms—in which it might be better.

1780. Have you required the nurses to report to you upon the state of the ventilation?—I cannot say specially with regard to ventilation. With regard to every thing connected with the patients, I have always desired the nurse to report to me.

1781. Are arrangements made for the warming of the institution?—I do not think the arrangements are sufficient; the fires in the corridors are not sufficient in cold weather.

1782. Does that arise from there not being a sufficient number of fires lighted, or from the arrangements?—I think the arrangements are not good. I do not think the fires are sufficient in very cold weather, for some of the wards at least, particularly those on the bottom floor.

1783. Do you think the patients generally have suffered from that, although they may not complain?—I think they have. I think they would be more comfortable if the corridors were warm.

1784. With such a class of patients is it possible they might suffer considerably in health from such causes, although they might not be given to complain?—That is very true.

1785. Are you satisfied with the dietary generally of the establishment?—The dietary I think is quite sufficient. They get abundance at present.

1786. You have, of course, the power of ordering any extras you may think necessary?—Yes.

1787. Do you think sufficient precautions are taken to see that the patients receive the extras you may order?—I could not say positively with regard to wine. You must trust a good deal to the honesty and fidelity of the nurses.

1788. Is it your impression those extras are pilfered by the attendants?—My impression is that they are not.

1789. Do you think that the remuneration given to the minor attendants is sufficient to secure the services of proper and competent persons?—The remuneration at present given, I would say, is very fair; but it is the most difficult thing in the world to get a class of persons to make suitable attendants for lunatic patients. I think persons who are competent to discharge such duties will not take such situations. Persons who are possessed of the requisite qualifications will rarely be got to accept such situations for, perhaps, double the remuneration the servants in the asylum have.

1790. Do you think the arrangements for the exercise of the patients are sufficient?—I do not think they are.

1791. Upon whom does the daily exercise of the patients depend?—It depends upon the nurses and keepers; they are, of course, directed by the manager and matron.

1792. What proportion of the inmates, on each side, are allowed to take exercise in the gardens and grounds attached to the institution?—I could not say what proportion are allowed; three-fourths might; that is to say, all that are in a condition to do so.

1793. What proportion of the patients, at each side, have access to the grounds and pleasure-grounds about the institution?—There are very few indeed that have voluntary access.

1794. What arrangements are made for the amusement of the patients?—Very few, indeed; scarcely any, I may say.

1795. Have you ever represented the necessity of some amusement being provided?—Yes, in general terms.

- DUBLIN. 1796. Was that verbally to the manager?—Sometimes by verbal communications to the manager, and sometimes to the Inspector, at the Board; no formal representation.
- The Richmond District Asylum.* 1797. Are any books provided for the several wards?—There are, a good many.
- J. Milnes, Esq., M.D.* 1798. Do you think there is a sufficient supply of books?—Hardly sufficient, if they were used—that is to say, a great many more might be used; but where you have an illiterate nurse, you can hardly expect that she would give books, and take an interest in a matter of reading.
- Books. 1799. In regulating the treatment of patients, do you consider it your duty to require that such things should be provided?—It is at the recommendation of the physician that books are provided; and, from time to time, I have taken books and given them to the patients, and desired others to do so. I do not think that is attended to as it should be.
1800. I believe the female patients have little occupation but sewing and knitting?—Scarcely any thing beyond that.
1801. Do you not think that occupations and amusements might be provided which would contribute to their cure?—I think so. I think there is a deficiency in that respect.
1802. Is it not very important that the persons in charge of lunatics in an establishment intended for their cure, should be persons of sufficient intelligence to be enabled to minister to their amusement, either by reading or by encouraging them to employ their time in other occupations?—It certainly would be most desirable.
1803. Are the class of persons employed as nurses in the Richmond Lunatic Asylum at all competent to act in that manner?—No, I should say not.
- Communications with Board. 1804. I understand that your communications to the Board were principally verbal?—Principally.
1805. Do you make any reports in any book?—I occasionally make written reports.
1806. In what book?—A book we have for the purpose.
- The old Asylum as a curative hospital.* 1807. Do you keep that book?—It is at the asylum.
1808. Considering there is a deficiency in the asylum of those amusements and other matters which are considered of importance in promoting the cure of lunacy, and considering the want of classification in the asylum, do you think, at present, the old Richmond Lunatic Asylum can be regarded as a curative hospital for the insane?—It is, certainly, not in a good condition to be considered as such.
1809. Could you estimate the proportion of cases curable?—I have 222 patients just now, and I question very much if there are forty curable cases amongst them.
- The new Asylum preferable as such.* 1810. Is the construction and position of the building very suitable for a curative asylum?—Quite the contrary.
1811. Is the new asylum preferable in that respect?—Infinitely preferable.
1812. Would you consider it desirable, therefore, that the new asylum should be appropriated solely for the curative cases?—I think it would be better under all the circumstances.
- Admissions. 1813. Such is not the arrangement at present?—Such is not the arrangement at present.
1814. Do you attend the Board on the admission days?—I do.
1815. When patients come up to be admitted, are they not first presented at the old asylum?—In every case they are.
1816. Are they transmitted to the new asylum or to the old asylum without reference to you?—They are; the manager regulates that.
1817. Do you know what rule he follows in the matter?—I really do not.
- Clinical Clerks. 1818. When patients are sent from your wards to the infirmary, are they always sent back to your wards again?—I having charge of the females, of course they would.
1819. I believe there are two clinical clerks attached to the institution?—There are.
1820. Are they resident?—They are resident.
1821. Are they attached particularly to any of the physicians?—They are. Dr. Tuckill has one, and I have one. Dr. Tuckill has not one at this moment, but he had, and generally has.
- Lectures and instruction. 1822. Do they attend you regularly on your visits?—They do.
1823. What clinical lectures or information is given in the institution?—Not lately any regular clinical lectures.
1824. Are there no lectures in conformity with the regulation of the Privy Council?—At present Dr. Banks gives a general course on Saturdays; and the other medical attendants, including myself, give clinical instructions, so far as explaining cases to pupils that come round with us.
- Medicines; compounding. 1825. By whom are the medicines compounded that are used in the institution?—By Mr. Beatty, the apothecary.
1826. Does he, himself, attend daily at the asylum to do that?—I am not certain about that; he is there frequently, I believe, but he has an assistant.
1827. Is his assistant one of the clinical clerks?—The present assistant is my clinical clerk.
1828. Is he qualified?—I am sorry to say he is not qualified; I am disappointed in him. The recommendation I got with him has not been borne out. He is amiable, trustworthy, and a person of excellent moral character, but I find his education is deficient. It was represented to me that he was a different person. There was no other candidate.
1829. By what arrangement did he come to discharge the duties of assistant to Mr. Beatty?—Indeed, I believe he is Mr. Beatty's apprentice—I am not certain.
1830. What are the qualifications for a clinical clerk?—The rule is, that he should have previously attended as a pupil at the asylum.

1831. Previous to his appointment as resident clinical clerk?—Yes.

1832. Did the individual to whom you refer attend in that way?—Not, perhaps, by having entered and paid as a pupil in the formal way; but still, having been constantly about the asylum, he was looked upon in that capacity. If there is more than one seeking for the situation, it is given after an examination. That has been done; and at the present moment there is more than one candidate for the office of clinical clerk to Dr. Tachell. It will be decided that way.

1833. By whom is this examination directed, and the appointment made—is it by the Governors, or any other authority?—The only examination I was present at was conducted by myself, and Dr. Tachell and Dr. Nugent were present, and two or three of the Governors. I think it is one of the regulations that such examination shall be held. The Board made the appointment of clinical clerk on Dr. Tachell's recommendation and mine.

1834. The regulation provides that the examination shall be conducted by a Committee, appointed by the College of Physicians and the College of Surgeons—is that practically the case at present?—It is not, and it never was done.

1835. How are the examinations now conducted, and by whom?—There never was but one examination. It occurred on an occasion when there were more candidates than one for the situation. If there is not more than one candidate, there is no examination; and in the case in which an examination did occur, it was conducted as I have told you.

1836. Is any notice given of the vacancies?—No.

1837. Are the clinical clerks competent to act upon any emergency that may occur?—I would say that, with the exception of the one I have referred to, they have been competent. We have had some excellent men there.

1838. Is the infirmary accommodation adequate to the wants of the old Richmond Asylum?—I would say so, certainly. Use of the infirmary.

1839. Are sick patients ever treated in their own cells?—Yes, frequently.

1840. What class of cases are sent to the infirmary?—The last case I sent up there was a case of erysipelas occurring in an old woman. Another case I sent there was one of pneumonia.

1841. Are they all cases of bodily illness?—No; persons in delicate health, who may be accommodated better there, will be sent up.

1842. Then, delicate patients, not affected by bodily illness, may be sent to occupy beds in the infirmary, as well as those suffering under such diseases?—They may.

1843. Was the infirmary intended to be appropriated to such cases as you last referred to?—I should say not.

1844. Do you consider it proper that such cases should be sent there?—I should think cases have been often sent to the infirmary that ought not to be sent there; but we have been driven to that from the pressure for accommodation, and when the manager desired that no bed in the infirmary should be left vacant.

1845. Can any patient be sent there without your orders?—Certainly not.

1846. Do you think it preferable the cases should be treated in their own wards?—Some I should say should not be treated in their own wards; for instance, patients labouring under affections of the chest should not be treated in the cell or in any room that has not the means of proper heating by fire.

1847. Do you consider the infirmary an essential portion of the establishment?—Yes, or some place where we could get the adequate means for fire and necessary accommodation.

1848. Do you consider the existing infirmary adequate for its object?—I think there are many defects in it. Its condition.

1849. What are those defects?—I think the windows are defective, and the corridors are not warm enough.

1850. Do you find that the cases which are transmitted from gaols so dangerous lunatics, are generally cases that it would be proper to receive into a lunatic asylum?—I have seldom found them otherwise, with certain exceptions. Persons are sometimes so far recovered before removal to the asylum, that, when received, they can hardly be pronounced insane; while others are kept so long in the gaols, that they become incurable before removal. In the majority of cases, insane persons are kept a great deal too long in the prisons; many for years. Dangerous lunatics.

1851. Is there any suggestion you would wish to make to the Commissioners with reference to the subject of the inquiry, that your experience would lead you to believe might be for the amendment of the present system?—I believe that the sooner a change is made in the management of this particular asylum the better. Change in the management.

1852. Do you mean with reference to the person in charge, or to the regulations which prevail in the asylum?—The person in charge.

1853. Do you consider him incompetent for the discharge of his duties on other grounds, besides not being a professional man?—The asylum has grown beyond his reach; it has gradually increased in extent, and consequently additional care should be bestowed upon it, while the manager has become infirm, and is less active and efficient.

1854. What is your opinion as to the advantage or otherwise of the patients being enabled to attend at religious worship?—I think that if a proper selection of cases be made, that on the whole it is advantageous, but it is a doubtful question if you take it in all its bearings. Religious worship.

1855. Do you give orders as to who shall or shall not be allowed to go to religious worship?—I very often give orders, or ask one of the patients would he like to go, and I encourage them to go very frequently; and I frequently ask, if I happen to pay a visit after service on a Sunday, whether they have liked it, and what have been their impressions about it. I ask them what was done, with a view to elicit from them how far they have been benefited by it.

1836. If you considered in any case that attendance at religious worship would lead to the excitement of the patients, you would, of course, give orders that such persons should not be sent?—Certainly.

1837. Do you think sufficient arrangements are made for giving baths regularly to patients in the institution?—I do not think there are.

1838. You do not think the arrangements, therefore, in that respect adequate?—I do not—they are deficient.
